FORGERY CHARGE BY THAW

U. S. WARNS DICTATOR HUERTA

WOMEN EATON WITNESSES

PROCLAIMS SELF AS DICTATOR

WASHINGTON, Oct. 13.—The United States today served notice on President Huerta, who today proclaimed himself dictator, through the embassy at Mexico City, that the Mexican government must protect the imprisoned deputies and that this government will countenance no violence or extreme measures against the political prisoners.

This action followed a conference between the President and Secretary of State immediately after the latter's hurried return to Washington today. Secretary Bryan when asked what the United States would do if the Mexican deputies were harmed, replied:

"That is a hypothetical question. I don't care to discuss the matter at this time."

The secretary added that the United States will take no further steps in the Mexican matter at present, but will "await developments." He said the State Department has not requested that any additional warships be sent to Mexican waters and this was confirmed by Acting Secretary of the Navy Roosevelt, who said that the Navy Department was taking no steps toward intervention in Mexico.

The greater portion of the Atlantic fleet is in Hampton Roads preparing for the annual Fall target practice, scheduled to start Friday. The battleships now at Vera Cruz will be relieved October 26 by other American vessels so as not to violate the letter of the international law, which states that foreign warships shall not remain in alien waters more than thirty days at a time.

Despite the Bryan and Roosevelt statements intervention in Mexico is again imminent. The Southern republic's internal situation is so critical that a combined movement by the American Navy and Army would surprise no government official close in touch with the situation.

It is understood that ever since Dr. William Bayard Hale returned from Mexico City with his official report on conditions there, President Wilson has been of the opinion that the United States would ultimately have to use stronger methods in dealing with General Huerta.

Secretary Bryan has from the beginning opposed intervention, but if Huerta slays the deputies whom he arrested on charges of sedition there is no doubt that this government will use a mailed hand.

Powers to Send Warships.

It became known today that Great Britain, Germany and France and the United States are agreed as to the policy to be followed if this country has to invade Mexico. From that time on the United States will exercise a virtual protectorate over every country between her southern border and the Panama Canal.

Confidential dispatches received from Mexico City say that six British ships are already on their way to Mexico to back up the United States if intervention is found necessary. German and French ships will follow at once unless there is a quick change in the situation.

"I do not see how it would be possible to hold an election in Mexico under the

Spencer Confesses That Hs Is a "Ghoul"

Claimed Fire Victim as His Sister to Get Property.

CHICAGO, Oct. 13.—Henry Spencer, the confessed multi murderer, today added the word "ghoul" to the criminal classification which applies to himself. He confessed to the police that he had identified a woman victim in the Iroquois Theatre fire, in which 600 lives were lost, as his sister in order to obtain property. He said he got $1,100 in money and $1,500 in jewelry.

"I was one of the first outsiders to get into the ruins of the Iroquois Theatre," Spencer asserted. "I was looking for loot. The thought came to me, 'Why not take a chance and identify one of these victims as a relative; perhaps the person might turn out to be rich.' Glancing down, I picked out the half-charred face of a woman. I cried that here lay my long-lost sister. My supposed sister was given a fine burial, with me playing the part of chief mourner."

MISSING PAIR ARE FOUND FOR POISON TRIAL

Two witnesses, both women, and both regarded as extremely valuable, have been found, and, it was announced today, will be ready to testify in the trial of Mrs. Jennie May Eaton, charged with poisoning her husband, Rear Admiral Joseph G. Eaton, at Assinippi, which opens tomorrow in the Plymouth County Court.

They are Mrs. Leon Booth and Mrs. Avery K. Powers, of Rockland, one time neighbors of the Eatons, who went to Connecticut toward the end of the inquest. It had been feared that by the absence of these two witnesses, a delay might be occasioned.

Another new witness who has been summoned, it was announced today, is Miss Grace Howard, daughter of John Howard of Assinippi. She was a neighbor of the Eatons, and is a nurse in the Three persons were injured, two of them seriously, in a collison between a street car and a laundry wagon, in Chelsea today. A Lynn-bound car struck a wagon driven by Charles W. Still of No. 115 Elm street, Somerville.

With him on the wagon was his daughter Rose, twelve, and his son Charles E., eight. All were thrown to the ground. Still was found to have a severe scalp wound and a cut on his face. His daughter was unconscious and is thought to have a fractured skull. The boy escaped with few injuries. The crash occurred at Broadway and Carey avenue.

Scotch Team Beats English at Soccer

Teams representing England and Scotland, selected from the best association football players from Boston and District League, played at the Locust street grounds, South Boston, today, before 2000 people.

Police Search for Lost Aviator

NEW YORK, Oct. 13.—After starting on a flight from Hempstead, L. I., to Oakwood Heights, Staten Island, this afternoon, Albert J. Jewet, flying in an eighty horse-power monoplane, disappeared. For the first time in the history of the city the police of New York were ordered to be on the lookout for an aviator.

250,000 CHEER BIG PARADE

Two hundred and fifty thousand people—a quarter of a million festive joyous—today made up Boston's biggest throng to see Boston's biggest Columbus Day parade. It was a gigantic outpouring of men, women and children, filled with the holiday spirit to do honor to the day and to the 18,000 other men, women and children who took part in the big pageant.

There were features galore, and right heartily did the throngs applaud them all from the start at Hereford and Boylston streets, in the Back Bay, clear down to the business district and right back again through Park square, Columbus avenue to Massachusetts avenue. There were flags of all nations with Old Glory proudly streaming in the sunlight, floats, streamers, pennants and other decorations in abundance.

Some of the features were:

The flagraising on the Common when the new municipal flag was floated to the breeze for the first time.

Six hundred Chinese with two floats representing the United States and China, and the goddess of happiness, with a Chinese "Smoothmere" band.

Veterans Cheered.

G. A. R. veterans, who were tumultuously greeted.

Several thousand Italians, who took up a whole division of the parade and made a fine showing.

A thousand Germans in the procession.

Sons of France, Japanese with floats, Scotch, Poles and Lithuanians, the float of the International Club in the Canadian section, 120 gypsies on their way to the Panama

Boy Scout Killed at Squantum Park

Warren Fletcher Fell Thirty Feet During Outing at Beach.

Warren Fletcher, fourteen, of Ballard street, Dorchester, was killed today when he fell thirty feet from the top of Squaw Rock at Squantum to the beach. He was a member of the [illegible] Boy Scouts who were on an outing at Squantum Park.

Squaw rock is at the extreme end of the City of Boston Park at Squantum and [illegible] thirty feet above the water. With some of the other boys, Fletcher was playing in the [illegible] at the top when he fell. He struck on the beach and rolled into the water.

"Anything New?" Foss Wires Secretary

Latter Holds "Nomination" Papers Ready for Release.

John L. Sherman, Governor Foss' private secretary, received this [illegible] today from Indianapolis:

"Anything new?
(Signed) E. N. FOSS."

Mr. Sherman [illegible]:

Governor Foss' acceptance of the independent nomination for Governor [illegible] Mr. Sherman's hands, awaiting the [illegible] permission to file it.

Boy Run Down by Auto Fatally Hurt

Eight-year-old James O'Neil, one of nine children of Mr. and Mrs. Dennis O'Neil of Houghton street, Somerville, was struck and fatally injured today by an automobile while he was running after a company of soldiers parading on Prospect street, Somerville. The auto was driven by President Frank Van Blarcom of the Atlantic Auto Company.

The lad's skull was fractured and his right leg broken. He was taken to the Cambridge Relief Hospital. The doctors said he could not live. President Van Blarcom was exonerated by the police and witnesses.

FELKER RULING READY

CONCORD, N. H., Oct. 13.—Governor Felker next Tuesday will announce his decision on the question of the extradition of Harry Thaw. His decision will not go into any other features of the case but will simply decide the question of whether Thaw shall be sent back to New York or not.

This became known today after Harry Thaw had issued a statement branding the [illegible] of an [illegible] to Governor Felker as a misrepresentation.

"I will announce my decision after the Council meeting Tuesday of next week. I have given both sides [illegible] October 20 to file all their material, and it won't take me long to make up my mind.

"I shall not notify them to be present at the Council meeting. I guess representatives of both sides will come without being asked. But whether they are there or not, I'm going to give out my decision.

"That will end my connection with the case. And my decision won't touch the question of sending Thaw back to Pennsylvania as his home State.

"I will either say: 'He shall be extradited' or I will say the opposite: 'He shall not be extradited.' Then they can fight it out in the Federal courts."

Governor Felker is annoyed at being dragged into the controversy over the indictment William Travers Jerome says Dutchess County Grand Jury voted against Thaw. The fact seems to be that an indictment was voted, but that it was later rescinded so that no indictment now exists. Therefore, Thaw's status is the same as if none had been voted.

Governor Felker today made public the text of the indictment which was voted and then rescinded. It names, besides Thaw, Richard J. Butler, Eugene Duffy and Michael O'Keefe.

Thaw himself declared this document was false. He said:

"Any copy of an indictment sent by Messrs. Jerome and Conger to Governor Felker is a false paper."

STORY OF TERRIBLE SCENES

FISHGUARD, Wales, Oct. 13.—The heroism displayed by common seamen of the crew of the Carmania stands out in brilliant relief against the cowardice of the sailors on the burned liner Volturno, which was lost, with 144 lives, and $1,750,000 damage. Passengers on the Carmania, which arrived this afternoon, paid high tribute to the courage and discipline of the Carmania's crew, while efforts were being made to take off the survivors of the Volturno.

Takes Up Purse for Seamen.

The bravery of First Officer Gardner, Seaman Heighway and Garvey and other sailors so thrilled the first class passengers of the Carmania that a purse was taken up for them.

From details of the rescue of Walter Trintepohl, an [illegible], of the Volturno, were given.

The Narragansett, another ship of the rescue fleet, had flashed her [illegible] with oil to calm the storm-tossed waters. From out of this grease-coated area the voice of Trintepohl had come pleading to be saved. The first reports had it that only Heighway went over the Carmania's side, but passengers declared that Garvey, after donning a lifebelt, jumped to go to the aid of his fellow seaman [illegible].

First Officer Gardner had charge of the first of lifeboats that battled incessantly against wind and waves to reach the burning ship. [illegible] by a [illegible], by [illegible] drenched with spray which [illegible] submerged them, tossed to boats which rocked like eggshells, this little band of seamen risked their lives without complaint. Their faces and hands were raw from salt water and white ones were torn to pieces in their hands, but they refused to give up until it became apparent that human sinew could not prevail against the strength of the elements.

Injured, Fought Fire.

Passengers on the Carmania confirmed the story of Walter Trintepohl, which had been flashed to shore before the Carmania landed. They also gave warm praise to the officers of the Volturno from Captain Inch down.

Second Officer E. Lloyd of the Volturno was one of the heroes of the disaster. He fell from a height of twenty feet while repairing the wireless apparatus. Although badly shaken up, he insisted on taking his place among the sailors who were fighting the flames.

Throughout the tragic Thursday he fought the blaze and at 7 o'clock, accompanied by three other seamen, he launched a small boat and made his way to the Grosser Kurfurst. The boat sank immediately after they were taken on board.

Captain Nearly Blinded.

Captain [illegible], both of the burned liner, stayed on his ship until his eyesight was almost lost. When he was taken aboard the Kroonland after being [illegible] he was unable to see. Ever

U. S. SUPREME COURT PAYS RESPECT TO WILSON.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 13.—The United State Supreme Court convened at noon today for the Fall term, every member of the court being at his place on the bench. The court adjourned at noon to go to the White House and pay its respects to the President.

present circumstances" said Senator Bacon, who called at the White House to discuss Mexican affairs with President Wilson today. "Huerta now has adopted such a policy that his opponents are afraid of arrest and imprisonment if they declare themselves. A Mexican election now would be a farce and unworthy of the consideration of this government."

WASHINGTON, Oct. 13.—Secretary of State and Mrs. Bryan are on their way here, leaving Knoxville, Tenn., hurriedly. Bryan before leaving would only say that the Mexican situation demanded his immediate presence at the capital.

The arrest of deputies by Huerta is believed to have brought about the new crisis. Huerta is to be warned by the State Department that no harm must come to the deputies.

According to report, the first official notice to be taken by the administration of the present status of Mexican political affairs will take the form of an expression of the hope that no harm will come to those deputies who still remain in prison. This expression will be equivalent to a warning that their assassination or execution will produce on the United States want is known in diplomacy as a "painful effect."

In other words, the Mexican government will be told inferentially that public sentiment in this country is likely to become inflamed over any bloody work on the part of those having the deputies in custody, thus making it harder for the Washington government to refrain from a drastic course. The representatives of the Constitutionalists here claim what has happened is in accord with the character and purposes of President Huerta, and they expect it to have an important favorable bearing on the efforts to dispose him.

HUERTA PROCLAIMS HIMSELF DICTATOR, EXPECT POWERS TO ACT

MEXICO CITY, Oct. 13.—Victoriano Huerta, provisional president, today proclaimed himself dictator of Mexico and overthrew the constitution.

Huerta issued a decree announcing that he has assumed all the former powers of Congress relating to war, finance and the domestic affairs of the nation. He says he will permit the Department of Justice to exercise its usual functions, "unless it interferes with his decrees." The dictator proclaims that he alone is the supreme power in Mexico. He pledges himself to make a due report of his actions to the next Congress to be elected, October 26.

All of today's papers carry dispatches from Vera Cruz, stating that British warships have been seen in the Gulf of Mexico and that there is growing that quick and decisive action is to be taken by the powers in the present crisis.

General Felix Diaz, who is returning to Mexico from Europe, has been warned in a cable dispatch sent to Havana that General Huerta has arranged to have him assassinated.

The dispatch was sent today by friends of Diaz after they had learned that two members of the Mexican secret service had been sent to Vera Cruz. The situation here was unchanged today, with troops and machine guns held in readiness in case of any outbreak.

HUERTA ORDERS ALL MEXICAN RAIL MEN TO KEEP OUT OF U. S.

LAREDO, Tex., Oct. 13.—Apparently anticipating a break in the relations between the United States and Mexico, the Huerta government today ordered all employes of the northern division of the Mexican National Railway to reside in Nuevo Laredo, which is just across the border, and forbade their crossing to the American side.

New City Flag Is Raised on Common

Ancients, Boy Scouts and 500 Spectators at Ceremony.

The Columbus Day celebration was ushered in today with the raising of Boston's new municipal flag on Boston Common. The flag was drawn to the head of the flag pole by Major Alvin P. Pease, the oldest member of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company and a member of Edward A. Kingsley Post 113, G. A. R.

A detail of seventy-five members of the Ancients, escorted by two companies of Boy Scouts, stood with heads bared, while the band played "The Star Spangled Banner." About 500 people had gathered for the flag raising.

Today Boston has for the first time in its 283 years, a municipal flag. It was chosen in competition, in which leading artists and designers took part. The flag bears on one side the three hills of the original Boston, and on the reverse side the city seal. The field is blue. William Wales of 119 Summer street was the designer.

"Mum" Wedding for Jessie Wilson

Mexico Offers $5 for Dr. Sun Yat Sen

TACOMA, Wash., Oct. 13.—The greatest insult that can be offered a Chinese citizen was heaped upon Dr. Sun Yat Sen today when officials of the republic sent broadcast a long list of men for whom the government would pay rewards. Dr. Sun's name was at the bottom of the list and for his capture as a plotter against the government the sum of $5 in Mexican money was offered.

Marshall, Refused Auto, May Buy Cycle

WASHINGTON, Oct. 13.—"I may buy myself a motorcycle." This was Vice-President Marshall's answer today to the refusal of Congress to buy him a new automobile to replace the one purchased four years ago for Vice-President Sherman.

MRS. RALPH P. HERRICK, former Brookline girl, whose husband is suing Albert H. Waitt, the Newton multi-millionaire, for $75,000 for alienation of affections.

Albert H. Waitt, multimillionaire of Newton, who was recently divorced by Mrs. Waitt, and who now faces a $75,000 suit for alleged alienation of affections, filed by Ralph P. Herrick, twenty-two, of No. 339 Hyde Park avenue, Roslindale, declared today he will bitterly contest the claim.

"There is nothing to Herrick's charge," said Waitt, who is the son of the late Henry Waitt, the cigar manufacturer. "If Herrick thinks I will not fight the charge, he is mistaken. I am no bone breaker."

Mrs. Herrick, who is twenty-one, is the daughter of a former Brookline minister. Her maiden name was Elizabeth Grambine. She was married two years ago to Herrick. They have a daughter, one year old.

Say Roosevelt Will Run If Sulzer Loses

Impeachment Court in Executive Session Before Voting.

ALBANY, N. Y., Oct. 13.—The high court of impeachment which will decide the fate of Governor Sulzer reconvened today and immediately went into executive session, preliminary to taking a vote.

A heavy force of policemen was on duty when the court went into session. It had been rumored that an attempt would be made to pack the galleries.

One hundred grafters were today threatened with jail by the Sulzer workers, no matter which way the impeachment court decided.

The up-State anti-Tammany element swept into town with the promise that Theodore Roosevelt would run for governor of New York if Sulzer fell in the fight and that Roosevelt would take up the graft pursuit begun by Sulzer.

Shakspere Too High Class for New York

LONDON, Oct. 13.—The Board of Governors of the Shakspere Memorial Theatre have cut New York off the itinerary of the coming American tour of the Stratford-on-Avon players, because New York is too fond of "Red Light drama." The announcement is made that the governors feel that New York audiences prefer unbuskined feminine limbs, and so fear that only a few of Shakspere's plays would appeal to the Gotham lobe.

Boston and Chicago will be visited as planned.

Two Liners Bring 500 Passengers

More than 500 passengers reached Boston today on the Allan liner Parisian from Glasgow, and the Marquette of the Red Star line, from Antwerp. The former brought 281 cabin and 115 steerage, while the Marquette and 112 cabin passengers, mostly immigrants. While in the English Channel the Marquette was in wireless communication with the burned steamer Volturno.

BOSTON RINGS WITH CHEERS FOR BIG PARADE

The militia, the Ancients, the postmen from the Boston postal district, various city departments, Boston Bruins, a special division by the social service display, an Egyptian pageant by members of the "Joseph and his Brethren" company from the Boston Theatre, and other big features.

Mayor Thrills Crowd.

Mayor Fitzgerald was here there and everywhere. He made a commanding figure seated on a horse. Hither and yon he rode, cheered by everybody. Finally he dismounted in front of the court of review on Tremont street, but only after he had caused the hearts of the throng to thrill with fear. This was when the Mayor was dismounting.

Able exponents that the Mayor is usually, his foot happened to catch in his stirrup, and for a moment it looked as if he might fall. But he recovered in a moment and was soon bowing to the applause of the crowd. He made two speeches from the stand, one of them being an address to the Italians in the procession.

The most exciting episode came when Fire Chief Mullen sent three pieces of fire apparatus from Arlington street along Beacon to the State House at top speed. Lieutenant-Governor Walsh received the parade at the State House and Mayor Fitzgerald and the City Council were in the court of review on Tremont street. Chief Marshal Harry L. Hawthorne, colonel, U. S. A., with his staff, reviewed the parade in Columbus square.

Old Town Crier.

An interesting prelude to the parade was Ye Towne Cryer, who, according to ye olden form, announced the coming of the parade. He was dressed in the old Pilgrim costume and rang a large brass bell before announcing the parade.

"Santa Maria," flagship of Columbus, by the Loose-Wiles Biscuit Company, was the first float of the parade, and undoubtedly a handsome one. The entire body of the flagship was composed of Sunshine Biscuit boxes. Columbus and other characters in the ship were dressed in ancient costumes. This float received great applause from the reviewing stand.

A float called War Time Lint Party showed a gathering of ladies dressed in the fashion of war days. They sat around a large table knitting and sewing.

Beautiful Flags.

The flags carried by the United Spanish War Veterans were exceedingly beautiful. U. S. flags of all kinds, made of heavy silk and bordered with rich gold fringe.

A float of the fire department entitled "How to Ring in an Alarm" was most instructive. "Where is the alarm nearest your home? Lack of that knowledge has caused great destruction," was in large letters.

Features of the park and recreation department attracted a beautiful float built entirely of ferns and Autumn leaves.

The Aquarium float contained a huge live seal, which barked loud as it passed the reviewing stand.

Three floats of the park and recreation department attracted a great deal of attention. One called Playground Slide contained a merry lot of youngsters thoroughly enjoying themselves sliding down the slide.

Army Aviator, 2000 Feet in Air, Ends Life by Shooting

ORAN, Algeria, Oct. 13.—One of the most dramatic cases of suicide on record came to light here today at the inquest into the death of Justin Soulbeilland, an army aviator. The evidence showed that Soulbeilland, after ascending 2,000 feet in his monoplane, killed himself. The machine, with no one to control it, fell to earth. Soulbeilland had shot himself.

Says Wilson Should Call Page Back

Mayor Fitzgerald insists the statement credited to Ambassador to England Page, at Southampton recently, that "the United States is still English led and English ruled," is "arrant nonsense" and warrants his recall by President Wilson. Speaking in Faneuil Hall, the Mayor declared Ambassador Page had sacrificed truth in order to cater to English nobility.

Anna Katherine Green Greatest American Writer of Detective Fiction Begins an Absorbing New Story in Next Sunday's American

EVELYN SAYS: "I Told Harry Everything."

I told him (Harry) everything, and he shook his head. "Poor little Evelyn!" he said, laying his hand on my shoulder, "they have been lying to you." I told him, too, of Stanford White.—From Evelyn Thaw's own story, disclosing full, intimate details for the first time, published in next Sunday's AMERICAN.

THAW, 8 WEEKS FREE, STILL BALKS JEROME

CONCORD, N. H., Oct. 13.—Harry K. Thaw has enjoyed eight weeks of freedom from Matteawan.

Surprising developments in his fight for permanent liberty instill the confidence that he will never be returned.

Not since the eventful night when the habitues of Madison Square Roof Garden were thrown into consternation by an unexpected revolver shot and saw Stanford White writhing in the throes of death has Thaw been nearer liberty.

His relentless foe, William Travers Jerome, who, for eight years, has pursued Thaw, and who is combined with the State officials of New York to reincarcerate him in the insane asylum, has been checkmated at every turn.

Confidence is the foundation stone upon which the Thaw resistance is erected. Thaw voices his optimism in the laconic expression, "I have had enough of the bughouse." His lawyers assert with equal positiveness that in their belief Thaw cannot be "railroaded" back to New York under due process of law.

Thaw's immediate liberty is in the hands of Samuel D. Felker, Governor of New Hampshire, to whom the State of New York, through the persistent Jerome, has appealed for extradition. Governor Felker gives absolutely no suggestion of what his decision may be.

In accordance with a request from Jerome, Governor Felker has continued the time for filing further information to October 20. An extraordinary Grand Jury session has been called in New York with the avowed purpose of indicting Thaw for conspiracy. District Attorney Charles S. Whitman is quoted as saying that it would be inconsistent for New York to charge with crime a man who has twice been adjudged insane, as an insane man cannot commit crime.

Further charges against Jerome have been made in a public statement issued by Thaw. The latest accusation is that Jerome neglected to supply the Thaw lawyers—in accordance with the established courtesy of the profession—with a copy of his appeal to Governor Felker for a continuance of the extradition proceedings. Thaw's lawyers have demanded to know the contents of the Jerome letter, and their demand has been unavailing. Thaw says that it is rumored that several inconsistencies and misrepresentations appear in the letter, and he demands an opportunity to reply to them.

With the adjournment of the Dutchess County Grand Jury, it became known that an indictment had not been returned. Jerome offers as an excuse for his Concord statement, the suggestion that an indictment was voted and subsequently rescinded, in refutation of that statement, Thaw asserts that it is almost impossible of belief that twenty-three men of sound judgment would vote to charge a man with a misdemeanor and immediately come to a sudden change of opinion.

Meanwhile the taxpayers of Dutchess County are raising violent protest to the unusual expenditure of money to recapture Thaw. The spectacle of chasing an insane person, convicted of no crime in the eyes of the law with special trains, armed deputies and high-priced lawyers, adduces highly unfavorable comment from the citizens who will be called upon to foot the bills. Jerome has presented several vouchers to the comptroller of New York, but that official has drawn no checks to cover them. Boston & Maine officials admit that they have not received the $204 for the special train that whisked Jerome into New Hampshire when Thaw was dumped across the Canadian line. Attorney John F. Ringwood of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., who says he knows the Dutchess County opinion, has advised Thaw that the taxpayers demand that Jerome "deliver the goods," before he is paid for the delivery; and that if Thaw should be returned to New York they will be sufficiently aroused to make a public demonstration in Thaw's favor.

Secret agents of Jerome are believed to have been spying on the Concord developments in the Thaw camp. The famous fugitive, himself, declared that a mysterious stranger, who boasted of several professions and also of an intimacy with Joshua Thaw, has persistently solicited information from the Thaw lawyers and attaches. Josiah Thaw does not know the man.

Finally the Thaw advisers stacked Attorney T. R. E. McInnis up against the stranger. McInnis ostensibly betrayed the Thaw secrets but in reality garnered much more information than the unfounded stories he told the stranger of the Thaw doings. Detective Sergeant John T. O'Dowd of Manchester was called into the case and soon afterward the stranger was served with a civil writ by Sheriff C. P. Smith for a bill contracted in Manchester five years ago. The stranger is no longer in Concord.

FELKER DECISION ONLY ONE STEP IN THAW FIGHT

Thaw's supreme struggle for freedom involves an amazing mass of legal possibilities which combine to practically guarantee him semi-liberty of at least two years. Governor Felker's decision, should it be to extradite Thaw, will remove but one of a series of legal stones upon which Thaw expects to eventually step to liberty. The case will go from Governor Felker to the United States District Court on a writ of habeas corpus which Thaw has sued. In the trial of this case practically the same questions as those involved in the extradition proceedings will be in order.

"Is a crime charged?" Upon Governor Felker's answer to this question depends the future of Thaw. The conspiracy is the offence which the Jerome prosecutors allege against Thaw, more specifically, that he conspired to deliver himself from Matteawan.

Thaw's lawyers maintain that an offence is not charged. They admit that Jerome affidavits show they Thaw connived the overt act of walking out of the insane asylum grounds. Qualifying this admission, the lawyers declare that Thaw had a perfect right to walk out.

Conspiracy, according to the Thaw lawyers' interpretation of the New York statutes, is a collusion between two or more persons to do an unlawful act or to perform a lawful act by unlawful methods. They are confident that Governor Felker will decide that the affidavits submitted by Jerome do not disclose anything collusion by Thaw with other persons, despite Jerome's assertion that he is on the back of men "higher up." It is further asserted that in the eyes of the law, Thaw is an insane man, and, therefore, is incapable of committing a crime.

Should Governor Felker refuse New York's request to extradite Thaw, the famous fugitive will be in the enjoyment of an unrestrained liberty in New Hampshire.

Will Go Home by Boat.

In this event he will proceed immediately to the Pennsylvania home of his boyhood to console his devoted mother in the declining years of her life. But to avoid the persecution of Jerome he will be obliged to evade the several States between New Hampshire and Pennsylvania, in any one of which Jerome might serve him by physical force and again subject him to Matteawan. Thaw will go to his boyhood home by boat if he is freed. Portsmouth, the historical city of peace, will afford the avenue of exit and Philadelphia, historical city of brotherly love, would welcome his return to home and mother.

Public sentiment is manifestly in favor of the liberation of Thaw. No greater evidence of that fact has come than from the words of Congressman Eugene E. Reed of Manchester. Upon a recent visit to Concord, Congressman Reed said that in Congress the sentiment is nine to one for Thaw, and that the belief prevails that "the poor fellow has suffered enough."

This statement increases with importance when it is realized that one status of the Thaw case may eventually find its way into the United States Senate. Thaw was uncovered and whisked across the Canadian border into this country in the darkness of night, without food or shelter and scantily clothed. This violence to which Thaw was subjected came to the force of a restraining edict from the King's Bench. Thaw appeals for an explanation. He does not desire revenge for the unceremonious treatment, but to establish the rights of all American citizens when under the supposed protection of international law.

Immigration officers have offered as a technical defence of their attack upon Thaw. They claim that they were not correctly served with the injunction from the court. That this defence is technical if not flimsy is evidenced by the fact that the officials base their case on the receipt of a copy of the order instead of the original order. The battery of Thaw lawyers agree unanimously that the officials were aware of the intent of the court.

Thaw petitioned the State Department through Senator Oliver of Pennsylvania to require an explanation through the British embassy. The department has found that the rights of American citizenship are not fully protected by the treaty of 1812 and by subsequent treaties. With the confidence that justice is on their side, the Thaw lawyers have determined to present the matter to Congress and a simultaneous presentation of the case will be made to the House of Commons in the English parliament.

Secretary Bryan of the State Department was immersed in the situation before he was advised of any justice which the Thaw side might hold. Acting for the governor of New York, Secretary Bryan had appealed to the Canadian government to return Thaw to New York. The Thaw lawyers ascertained from the State Department that Mr. Bryan could not consistently call upon England to explain the alleged humiliation to which Thaw was subjected when he had graciously requested the deportation of the fugitive.

Politics have entered materially into the general discussion of the Thaw case. Here in Concord the claimants for the mayoralty are wrangling over the propriety of extending the keys of the city to Thaw, and up in the Province of Quebec, the Liberals and Conservatives, including the active Laurier and the dignified Borden, are raising points of charges and defences over the involuntary exit of Thaw from the Dominion under the British flag.

In all the array of legal technicalities and disputing battles there is no person more serene than Harry K. Thaw. The intricacies of law hold no terror for him. He does not conceive the possibility of his return to Matteawan. Flushed with the joy of his semi-liberty he is happily fighting on for a more satisfactory freedom.

Thaw Active in Fight.

Day after day finds himself adjusting himself to the arduous routine of his work. Consultations with lawyers, answering of correspondence and the dictating of the public policy of the case are the three important features which command Thaw's attention, yet he daily disposes of an immense volume of less inspiring routine. His capacity seems to be unlimited.

And Thaw derives much pleasure from it all. When a friend suggested to him that he needed more pleasure and less work he promptly replied, "Well, this is certainly better than Matteawan."

It is evident to friends and enemies alike that Thaw has considerably improved since his advent to Concord. He is no longer intoxicated by his sudden liberty but has adjusted himself to the situation. Should he be cast upon his resources today in the woods of northern New Hampshire, his friends say, he would arise to any emergency, no matter how exacting. While the matter may be impertinent, his lawyers say they would welcome a test of his sanity before an unbiased tribunal.

NEW VIEW OF EVELYN NESBIT THAW

This Photograph Is One of the Best Pictures Ever Taken of Mrs. Thaw Since She Returned to the Stage.

LOVE STORY OF EVELYN AND HARRY THAW

CHAPTER XLIII.

"And thru another gossip came
To add his mite to the flame."

—"A Village Tale."

Coincident with the stir about the report that Evelyn Nesbit Thaw was to be ejected forcibly there came a statement by Stanford White's chauffeur which made Evelyn and the Thaw defence furious. This statement was to the effect that he took Evelyn from Reisler's to her hotel at White's request one night in February, 1906, and remained with her until her marriage, and then took her home from the same rendezvous with another woman in September, 1906, five months after her marriage. White did not accompany Evelyn on the ride home either time.

As Evelyn had denied being in White's company at any time since her marriage, the defence was naturally wrathy at the chauffeur's story.

The chauffeur was John Burns. He was on duty from 5 p. m. to 5 a. m., driving White's electric limousine. The fact that White had a man especially to drive him nights was an interesting illustration of his nocturnal activities.

Burns declared that, so far as he knew, Mrs. White was the only woman ever in the electric hansom at the same time with White. He also denied any "lower eights." His status was in part.

Evelyn Nesbit rode in Mr. White's electric hansom on two occasions which I well recall. She was alone on one occasion and with a lady friend on another.

The first time I ever saw the present Mrs. Thaw was in February, between 12 and 1 o'clock in the morning, standing with a company of men and women on the sidewalk in front of Reisler's. Mr. White escorted her to the curbing and put her in, saying to me: "Take this lady home and then come right back for me."

Miss Nesbit was then living at the Hotel Walcott, if my memory serves me right. She impressed me as having brought about the situation. I took her to the hotel and then went back and took Mr. White to the Brook Club at No. 6 East Thirty-fifth street.

Several weeks passed before I saw Miss Nesbit again. On a very cold Sunday night I took Mr. White to Carl Berger's catering establishment on West Thirty-sixth street. He was going to attend a dinner and it was between 8 and 9 o'clock when he alighted from the hansom. I had pulled in from Fifth avenue.

Hardly had Mr. White reached the sidewalk when a horse hansom approached from Broadway and pulled up. Miss Nesbit jumped to the sidewalk and approached Mr. White, saying as she held out her hands:

"HELLO STANNIE! HOW HAVE YOU BEEN?"

Mr. White shook hands. He seemed anxious to get up the stoop. They talked a few minutes and then bade her goodnight. He then hurried into Berger's place and she got back into her horse hansom and was driven off.

Judge Olcott was told what Chauffeur Burns' statements are and without foundation. There is not one chance in ten million of its being true.

* * *

Meanwhile the affidavit story continued to cause ripples from a boil. It was said, but only did Stanford White have a hand in getting the affidavit made by Evelyn, but that he even wrote some [illegible] statements into the document in his own hand. The original was said to have been photographed and photostated, with the photographic copy [illegible] presumably in Abe Hummel's office.

Then was taken to mean that Gerber had made this statement, was asked what he had said to Hummel and Gerber denied having come near at all. He is said and some that he might have talked with someone from Howe & Hummel's offices.

Then Mr. Gerber was appealed to, and the most he would say was this:

"I will neither deny nor affirm that such an affidavit or a copy of it is in existence here. But I would go very slow in making an emphatic denial that such an affidavit can be produced at the proper time."

This was tantamount to saying that the Assistant District Attorney knew more than he chose to tell and that there actually was an affidavit or a copy of one.

Whereupon Judge Olcott came back with the angry denial that, "It is a lie from beginning to end."

To Be Continued.

JAN KUBELIK DELIGHTS 3,000 AT SYMPHONY

The little wizard of the violin had arranged a program which was popular in its melodic appeal. He has traveled around the world since his last appearance in Boston and it does seem as if his shaggy hair and retreated a bit further up the dome of his forehead, but in other respects he is unchanged.

He is still the master of a peculiar type of violin tone, a sweet, sonorous singing tone that never fails to enthrall. The concerto by Paul Gamo in B minor, No. 2, is a happy selection for the violinist, for more than most concertos it abounds in plaintive and sweet melodies that flow so freely tone from the violin of Kubelik.

In modern music there are few more charming pieces than Wieniawski's Legende and Polonaise in A major, while the Bach Chaconne is a pretty test of the violinist's art.

Kubelik was prodigal of encores and when we came away at 5:30, he was still playing to an audience that could not get enough.

Next Sunday Madame Melba will be the attraction. A prodigal management had coupled up Melba and Kubelik in a joint concert arrangement, but manager Modgett, realizing that each was a star attraction separately, is presenting them a week apart.

Why Washburn Wasn't Recognized at the C. C. Banquet

Pres-ident Wilson has written his sympathy to Senator Lodge, and we understand Mr. Lodge is much improved. A few years ago people who were sick used to believe that the King's touch would cure them.

* * *

Mr. Bird is making lots of noise about his "moral power to the Governor" issue, but we understand that Tom Riley is agin it.

* * *

Representative Washburn of Worcester appeared at the City Club banquet without a pencil in his mouth, and many of his best friends didn't recognize him.

Mr. Washburn chews up more pencils in a session than Uncle Joe Cannon did cigars.

* * *

When they said Congressman Gardner's doctor had advised him to eschew dinners instead of chewing them Mr. Washburn remarked that the doctor was a "good Republican." Which was a glimpse beneath the surface, for good Republicans are unanimous in hoping Mr. Gardner will keep as well as possible during the campaign.

Chairman Bangs of the Gardner committee in Boston is trying to raise a little money. Apparently some of those who read up on that case and I know that such a person must be the guilty one.

There is something fascinating about mysteries, and we all feel the detective instinct stirring within us.

Relentlessly Logical.

This selective instinct explains the satisfaction people find in detective fiction. Here the mysteries are always a little more fascinating and their solution more unexpected than in real life, and when it comes to the deep, dark mysteries that are unfathomable by anybody but the crime director of the book we must take off our hats to Anna Katherine Green.

Who is Anna Katherine Green, that woman with the brain so relentlessly logical? Her books we all know, but the author is as mysterious as her own plots. Is she young, is she old? Where does she get her amazing ideas, displayed in such works as "The Leavenworth Case," "The Filigree Ball," the "Millionaire Baby" and "Initials Only?"

Does she write under a nom de plume, where does she live, and is she a professional detective?

We can answer all your questions and we venture to say that you will be surprised. In the first place her name is Rohlfs. Anna Katherine Green was her maiden name, but she has borne the name of Rohlfs since 1884. Mrs. Rohlfs is quite an elderly lady. She declares she will be sixty-seven her next birthday. She lives in Buffalo, New York, and her principal amusement is reading other people's detective stories and studying real life crime with a view to securing pleas for fiction.

At Her Zenith

Mrs. Green, let us call her so, because the country knows her only by that name, was the daughter of James Wilson Green, and was born in Brooklyn. She was graduated from the Ripley Female College of Poultney, Vermont, in 1867, and was married to Charles Rohlfs in 1884. She was approaching middle age when she was moved to write and then she sprung into fame almost instantly with her first book, "The Leavenworth Case." This absorbing novel still commands a steady sale, but it was written more than a quarter of a century ago.

Mrs. Green has written steadily ever since, seldom failing to produce less than one book a year. Most of these books have been very successful.

Mrs. Green is now in the zenith of her remarkable mental powers. Her mind sharpened by nearly a generation of contact with detectives of her own creation was never better equipped to produce a masterpiece of enthralling fiction.

ANNA KATHERINE GREEN STORY TO BE IN AMERICAN

Anna Katherine Green has written a brand-new detective story for the Boston Sunday AMERICAN, and the first installment will appear next Sunday.

Everybody knows that Anna Katherine Green is the greatest American writer of thrilling and detective fiction. Nobody who has yet appeared in this country has challenged her mastery of the art of exciting and sustaining interest.

Every human being is at heart a detective. Notice how we all leap at a new murder mystery in the news of the day; how our minds unconsciously assign themselves to build a theory; how without stirring from our daily routine we dwell mentally with the police and reporters on the great case.

How many people do you know who talk about such a case as the murder of Admiral Eaton, wagging their heads sagely and declaring:

"Well, the police can say what they please. You read up on that case and I know that such a person must be the guilty one."

There is something fascinating about mysteries, and we all feel the detective instinct stirring within us.

Relentlessly Logical.

This selective instinct explains the satisfaction people find in detective fiction. Here the mysteries are always a little more fascinating and their solution more unexpected than in real life, and when it comes to the deep, dark mysteries that are unfathomable by anybody but the crime director of the book we must take off our hats to Anna Katherine Green.

Who is Anna Katherine Green, that woman with the brain so relentlessly logical? Her books we all know, but the author is as mysterious as her own plots. Is she young, is she old? Where does she get her amazing ideas, displayed in such works as "The Leavenworth Case," "The Filigree Ball," the "Millionaire Baby" and "Initials Only?"

Does she write under a nom de plume, where does she live, and is she a professional detective?

We can answer all your questions and we venture to say that you will be surprised. In the first place her name is Rohlfs. Anna Katherine Green was her maiden name, but she has borne the name of Rohlfs since 1884. Mrs. Rohlfs is quite an elderly lady. She declares she will be sixty-seven her next birthday. She lives in Buffalo, New York, and her principal amusement is reading other people's detective stories and studying real life crime with a view to securing pleas for fiction.

At Her Zenith

Mrs. Green, let us call her so, because the country knows her only by that name, was the daughter of James Wilson Green, and was born in Brooklyn. She was graduated from the Ripley Female College of Poultney, Vermont, in 1867, and was married to Charles Rohlfs in 1884. She was approaching middle age when she was moved to write and then she sprung into fame almost instantly with her first book, "The Leavenworth Case." This absorbing novel still commands a steady sale, but it was written more than a quarter of a century ago.

Mrs. Green has written steadily ever since, seldom failing to produce less than one book a year. Most of these books have been very successful.

Mrs. Green is now in the zenith of her remarkable mental powers. Her mind sharpened by nearly a generation of contact with detectives of her own creation was never better equipped to produce a masterpiece of enthralling fiction.

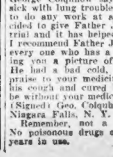
Declares Drowned Sailor Was Her Boy

NEWPORT, R. I., Oct. 13.—When Mrs. J. T. Comerford of New York claimed one of the three men drowned in Bridgeport Harbor, September 20, when a launch of the destroyer McCall was swamped in a collision, as her son, the real identity of the youth who enlisted under the name of Joseph E. Russell was revealed.

Dorchester Cat in Fire Saves Family

Sergeant Charles R. Ryan's effort to end gambling in the Hyde Park district resulted in twelve men being rounded up at No. 4 Davey street and No. 95 Collins street. They will be arraigned Tuesday on the charge of gambling.

"BABY AND I WERE CURED BY FATHER JOHN'S"



Baby Had a Cold and I Had Lung Trouble

Now We Are Both Strong and Well."

In a recent letter from Niagara Falls, George Colquhoun says: "I was taken sick with lung trouble and was not able to do any work at all. Finally, I decided to give Father John's Medicine a trial and it has helped me wonderfully. I recommend Father John's Medicine to every one who has a cold. I am sending you a picture of myself and son. He had a bad cold, and I gave great praise to your medicine, for it stopped his cough and cured him. I would not be without your medicine in the house." (Signed) Geo. Colquhoun, 746 10th St., Niagara Falls, N. Y.

ROTTEN EGG CASES UP TO HEALTH BOARD

You all read Mr. Cassidy's expose of the rotten egg business in the Sunday AMERICAN. He charged the following individuals and firms with selling rotten eggs contrary to law:

M. Brown of No. 171 Fulton street, Boston.

Standard Egg Company of No. 111 South Market street, Boston.

Boston Egg Company of No. 143 Fulton street, Boston.

J. Pollen of No. 37 Perry street, Everett.

He asks today what the State Board of Health is going to do about it?

By HARRY P. CASSIDY.

In yesterday's AMERICAN I charged several firms with selling rotten eggs in defiance of law. I gave the evidence in detail. I told whom, how, how many and to whom these rotten eggs were sold.

I did it to arouse the people to the danger of eating poisonous, germ-laden eggs and to prevent them from being swindled. The AMERICAN spent its time and money to establish the existence of the rotten egg business beyond any possibility of refutation.

It has spent its time and money to prove beyond a doubt that the State Board of Health, charged by law to protect the public's health, is not doing its duty.

Section 3 of Chapter 654 of the Acts of 1913, An act relative to the sale and use of eggs unfit for food, says: THE STATE BOARD OF HEALTH SHALL ENFORCE THE PROVISIONS OF THIS ACT.

Note the act does not say MAY ENFORCE it says SHALL ENFORCE. The State Board of Health may say it has not the evidence to prosecute. It knows the AMERICAN would not publish charges openly against firms unless the evidence was so strong all possibility of a libel suit was discounted.

Plenty of Authority.

I showed these eggs were being sold in Malden, in Everett. The State Board of Health and its inspectors know that these eggs are being sold in other sections of the State. If they say they do not, then I say they are not doing their duty.

The State Board of Health has for months been accused of neglect of duty, aided about pleading lack of authority under the law.

I am going to tell all health officers that they have plenty of authority. If their health officers claim that prosecutions cannot be sustained under the law, backed by the AMERICAN and the evidence I will add the point only for further argument, let them use the National Pure Food and Drugs Act.

This law was passed September 30, 1906. The State Board of Health has always enforced this unassailable law. It had to. Section 5 of the national law says:

THAT IT SHALL BE THE DUTY OF EACH DISTRICT ATTORNEY TO WHOM THE SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE SHALL REPORT ANY VIOLATION OF THIS ACT, OR TO WHOM ANY HEALTH OFFICER OR AGENT OF ANY STATE, . . . SHALL PRESENT SATISFACTORY EVIDENCE OF ANY SUCH VIOLATION, TO CAUSE APPROPRIATE PROCEEDINGS TO BE COMMENCED AND PROSECUTED IN THE PROPER COURTS OF THE UNITED STATES, WITHOUT DELAY, FOR THE ENFORCEMENT OF THE PENALTIES AS IN SUCH CASES PROVIDED.

Today there are in Boston warehouses unused eggs which the owners dare not ship out of the State for the reason that they are to be used for human food—laden bacteria. The government would seize them the moment they went into interstate commerce.

What Will Be Done?

What does the State Board of Health intend to do about these eggs? Do they intend to sit idle while these eggs are being made up into the cakes and pies of eleating lakers?

For the State Board of Health to say it has no power to prosecute these dealers is nonsensical.

I have shown through the AMERICAN:

First, that I have evidence enough which is at the disposal of the State Board of Health, to prosecute.

Second, that there is authority enough under Chapter 654 to fine or jail these dealers.

THIRD, that the national law gives State Health agents the power to prosecute under the national food law.

In the face of these facts how can the State Board of Health be excused for not prosecuting? They are sworn to protect the public health, to do their duty.

Unless the State Board of Health moves to stop this vile, unsanitary traffic in rotten eggs, it must stand before the people as friends of the rotten egg man.

And the people demand prompt action in these days of reform to know that health inspectors are not friends of rotten egg men unless for a consideration. Silence in the face of this charge means confining and treason.

I contend that the health official who fails to perform his sworn duty to protect the public against rotten eggs is quite as bad as the criminals he protects.

WHAT IS THE STATE BOARD OF HEALTH GOING TO DO ABOUT IT?

A MESSAGE TO YOU!

A.O.H. Women Decry School Sex Hygiene

Pass Resolutions Against Modern Dress and Plays.

MIDDLEBURG, Oct. 13.—We resent the insult to the Christian motherhood of this country in an attempt to introduce into the schools the study of sex hygiene. We condemn as subversive to good morals the imparting of sex knowledge in our children by any other than the parents and the divinely constituted guides of the church."

This resolution was passed by the Ladies' Convention A. O. H., at their quarterly convention, held in K. of C. Hall.

Another resolution of vital interest was the following:

In view of the fact that many girls are led astray by low wages and the high cost of living, we protest against low wages and resolve that a minimum wage of no less than $8 per week may be secured. That we also ratify the resolution as made by the Mass. L. A. A. O. H., to do everything possible to discourage indecency in dress and to remain away from suggestive plays.

Auto News

By J. C. KERRISON.

It is soon job to take care of 5,000 people on sight-seeing automobile trips around Boston, yet Frank Donovan, manager of the J. S. Donovan Motor Company, distributors of the Studebaker car, got away with it and is being showered with praise by the committee that had this in charge for the American Bankers' Association.

Mr. Donovan furnished one hundred automobiles for four days and took the distinguished visitors through the Metropolitan Park system, along the North Shore and up to Concord and Lexington. In spite of the many different cities there was not a hitch in the handling of the one hundred automobiles and the sight seeing stops at everything which possessed historic or educational interest and Mr. Donovan says that one of the biggest rent-a-car contracts that has ever been handled in Boston or any other big city. Mr. Donovan says that the outlay was close of $12,000.

In addition to being the Studebaker agents in this city, the Joseph S. Donovan Company do a high-grade used car business, and also have a big reeling department.

It does seem as though the State Constabulary is getting more than its own way in the racing game. Earl Cooper, who is the king of racing pilots at the present time, was a fifteen-mile start event at Fresno, Calif., the other day, and after losing the twenty-five miles for-all on a dirt track. His time for the latter event was twenty-three minutes and four seconds, which the State people state is another new world's record. Magone, driving another Stutz car, won second place in both of the above races.

SEEK PERFECT COUPLE TO WED FOR EUGENICS

NEW YORK, Oct. 13.—Five hundred dollars to start a home, and $500 on the birth of their first child, is the sum offered by the Sociological Fund Committee of the Medical Review of Reviews, for the perfect man and perfect woman who will agree to wed, as a test of eugenics.

The society, through President Frederic H. Robinson, is asking for applications, and the applicants will be examined by physicians, both in regard to their mental and physical condition, and in regard to their ancestry and hereditary taints.

The thought of love has not entered into the question. The man and woman will be selected separately, and will then be introduced and invited to wed. No acquaintance other than the presentation of children, will enter into the case. When the examinations will be made, and by whom, will be announced as soon as the committee has decided this point.

Mr. Robinson's offices are located at No. 104 Bleecker st., and the Sociological Fund Committee with him are Norman Haigood, chairman; Mrs. H. P. BACKACHE IS A DANGER SIGNAL

There are other symptoms, such as pains in the region of the kidneys, nervousness, dizziness, tired and wornout feeling, weak bladder, or urinary troubles, which are just as dangerous, for the slightest kidney derangement if neglected may develop into the deadly Bright's disease, dropsy or diabetes.

It is not only dangerous, but needless, for you to suffer and endure the tortures of these troubles, for Croxone promptly and surely relieves. There is no more effective remedy for kidney, bladder trouble and rheumatism, than Croxone, because it reaches the cause. It soaks right into the kidneys, through the walls and linings, cleans out the clogged up pores, neutralizes and dissolves the poisonous uric acid and other waste matter, that lodge in the joints and muscles and cause those terrible rheumatic pains, and makes the kidneys filter the poison from the blood and drive out the uric acid.

Three doses of Croxone a day for a few days is often all that is ever needed to relieve backache, bladder or overcome disagreeable urinary disorders.

You will find Croxone different from other remedies. It is so prepared that it is practically impossible to take it without results. An original package of Croxone costs but a trifle, and all druggists are authorized to return the purchase price if it should fail in a single case.—Adv.

NURSE IS NEW WITNESS FOR EATON TRIAL

St. Luke's hospital, New Bedford, where she was at the time of Admiral Eaton's death. Miss Howard declares that she is greatly puzzled at the summons, as she knows nothing of the case which might be of value to either side.

Last Sunday in Jail.

Mrs. Eaton has had her last walk in the jail yard before she faces trial tomorrow in the Plymouth court. Her last Sunday in jail was spent quietly, and its principal events consisted of a final touch to the home by which she expects to acquit herself of the charge, and the trying on of a dress, made by Dorothy Ainsworth, her daughter, which she will wear at the trial.

There was considerable activity today on both sides. Attorney William A. Morse, chief counsel for the defense, held an important conference with his client today. District Attorney Barker was also active preparing his case, but declined to comment upon his work.

Mrs. Eaton, who was arrested last March charged with the murder of her husband, is ready for the ordeal. She is in good health and confident that her name will be cleared of the charge.

Admiral Eaton, a retired naval officer, died on March 8. Dr. Joseph Frame of Rockland had been called to the Eaton home in West Norwell a few days before. An autopsy was held and a result part of the stomach were sent to Professor Whitney of Harvard for analysis. March 15 the death of the naval officer presented such curious and mysterious aspects that District Attorney Barker began an investigation. Mrs. Eaton was arrested on March 20.

A Grand Jury indicted her on seven counts and upon her appearance in criminal session of the Superior Court she entered a plea of not guilty. The specific counts in the indictment are:

First count—Poisoning of Joseph G. Eaton by white arsenic, beginning with mixture of the same and tea on March 6, 1913, and continuing until March 8, 1913, day of death, by mixing said poison with water.

Second count — Poisoning with white arsenic, beginning with mixtures of same and postum on March 6, 1913, and continuing until March 8, 1913, by being mixed with water.

Third count—Poisoning with white arsenic on March 7, 1913, by some means or manner unknown to the Grand Jury.

Fourth count—Poisoning by white arsenic from Jan. 1, 1913, to March 8, 1913, by some means and manner unknown to Grand Jury.

Fifth count—Poisoning by white arsenic on March 7, 1913.

Sixth count—Poisoning by white arsenic from January 1, 1913, to March 8, 1913.

150 Talesman Called.

Mrs. Eaton has two daughters by a former marriage, Mrs. June Ainsworth Keyes and Dorothy Ainsworth Eaton. Mrs. Eaton is the divorced wife of Henry Ainsworth, who at one time was prominent in Washington society. He will be a witness at the trial. Following her divorce from him she became a nurse in the family of Rear Admiral Eaton.

The Eatons lived in what is known as Assiniput. It is believed that many of the Eaton neighbors will be prominent witnesses. More than twenty-five have received a summons to appear tomorrow.

One hundred and fifty talesmen have been summoned.

MRS. EATON READY FOR GREAT ORDEAL BEFORE THE JURY

By GERTRUDE ELIOT.

If, as you wonder where and when we met,
You hear a wave amid the sleeting flowers,
It is my heart that cannot ever forget
Those hours with thee, those golden hours.

Bend if you will and kiss the flowers for me,
Speak for the love of yesteryears,
O love, through all these lonely days to be,
My heart will hear, my heart will hear.

These verses, penned many years ago, have touched a responsive chord within the tender heart of Mrs. Jennie May Harrison Eaton.

Today, only twenty-four hours before she goes on trial for the alleged murder of her husband, Rear Admiral Joseph Giles Eaton, she mused over those lines.

So absorbed is she with the love of yester-year that she apparently pays no heed to the present.

The stage is set for her trial. Judge Aiken has only to enter the courtroom tomorrow and the wheels of justice will begin to turn.

It will mark the beginning of another chapter in the eventful life of this most talked-of woman in New England.

How will she appear?

How will she act?

I have asked myself these questions and I am sure every other woman interested in this case has asked them, too. But we will not know until tomorrow. At 9:30 she will be escorted to the courtroom. Not until she actually faces the stern, cold and depressing atmosphere of a criminal courtroom will we know how this woman of mystery will act.

Today she stands ready for the great ordeal. The routine of jail life has not, as one would imagine, had a telling effect upon her.

Mrs. Eaton is in many respects a most remarkable woman. She has one cardinal virtue that was her's as a girl and which became strengthened in later years—supreme confidence in herself.

Her trial will be unique in many ways. It will be the first important murder trial where the mysterious element of poison is concerned since the now famous trial of Jane Toppan more than ten years ago.

The trial will also be a legal duel between two men who have made a study of criminal law. Mrs. Eaton will be defended by William A. Morse, one of the most prominent criminal attorneys in New England. He will be assisted by Francis J. Gorgan, who for several years has acted as personal counsel for the accused. The government will be represented by District Attorney Barker. Judge Aiken, as the chief justice of the Superior court, has presided over many notable murder trials.

The trial will reveal the inside story of this woman's life—the tragedy of her first marriage, the fight against poverty, her romantic meeting with Admiral Eaton, the gallant and lovable naval officer, all will be told.

FIRST COMPLETE STORY OF LINER VOLTURNO DISASTER

piece he went on board the Kroonland physicians have been struggling to save his eyesight. In the position which Captain Inch took when the mutinous sailors of the Volturno thrust back the passengers in the rush for the lifeboats he fought the full effect of the heat from the flames that were destroying his ship. At no time, however, did he waver in his heroism, and he had to be assisted into the boat which took him off the traveling ocean volcano.

When the fire started, from an explosion somewhere in the depths of the ship, the captain was the first man on deck, quieting the frightened passengers—fighting to control the maddened crew.

From that time till he left the vessel—the last man to leave, as his duty was—he did not sleep. It was a thirty-hour vigil.

Captain Inch fought against the efforts of the crew to seize the boats. It was the panic which sent the crew tumbling into the first boats that cost them their lives. Their own weight broke the boats in two as they were lowered, and every man was drowned. It was the lifting reward for their cowardice.

When Captain Inch saw the fate of those who had attempted to outrace in these first boats, he acted instantly to save other lives. He cut the tackle on the davits, so that the remaining boats could not be lowered.

Later, when the Carmania appeared above the wind-tossed bottom and nosed her way toward the burning vessel, the firemen from below abandoned their posts and rushed for the deck, fearful of being left behind. It was Captain Inch, alone, who with a revolver in each hand, drove them back to their places.

Captain Inch remained on his bridge till the flames swept it. He was the last to retreat as the fire crept along the deck. He was the last man taken off the vessel, and when he left her, his shoes were almost burnt through from the heat of the decks on which he had been standing.

Captain Spandenburg of the Grosser Kurfurst sent the following message to New York by wireless, and it was relayed here:

"We picked up wireless calls for help from the Volturno about 4 p. m. Thursday. We proceeded at full speed toward the spot where the disaster occurred, finding the Volturno a mass of flames. The fire originated from an explosion in the hold, which had resulted in the death of several passengers and members of the crew.

"Eleven steamers reached the scene of the disaster in response to wireless calls from the Volturno and the Carmania.

"It took over six hours for two small boats from the Grosser Kurfurst to reach the Volturno. The seas were very high. Approach to the fire-wrecked vessel was almost impossible.

"The Volturno sent out a boat with five men, who were taken on board and immediately afterwards the life

Death Toll Now Set at 144; 485 Passengers Saved

The revised figures given out by the Uranium line are as follows:

TOTAL NUMBER ON BOARD	654
PASSENGERS	561
CREW	93

boat was saved by the Grosser Kurfurst were eighty-six, including the second officer, the engineer and sixteen members of the crew.

Seek Missing Lifeboats.

Carmania and Touraine remained behind to search for two missing lifeboats full of passengers.

Almost all of the Volturno's lifeboats were smashed as soon as attempts were made to lower them. Survivors are being well cared for.

A wireless report received by the North German Lloyd officials from Captain Hagenmeyer of the steamer Seydlitz declared that he had rescued from the Volturno one cabin passenger, Adolph Baumgarten and wife, six children and seventeen men, steerage passengers, and sixteen members of the crew, a total of forty-six.

CARMANIA OPERATOR'S STORY OF SEA TRAGEDY

On October 9 we received a call for help from the Uranium Volturno, which reported that she had 657 persons, including a crew of 93 on board. The operator on the Volturno said the vessel was afire and the flames were spreading rapidly through the hold. The Carmania was 78 miles away at the time. Captain Barr gave order to crowd on all steam. Despite the heavy seas which were running at the time and a heavy gale which was blowing, we made the 78 miles in about four hours.

When we arrived within sight of the Volturno we saw clouds of smoke issuing from the ship. When we got close enough we could see flames spurting from her ventilators. It seemed that the entire inside of the hull was afire.

Two sets of falls were seen hanging loose over the sides, showing that lifeboats had been lowered. This was a sure sign that the captain of the Volturno considered the situation serious.

We could see the passengers huddled on the after deck held in safety by life lines. After completing a circuit around the burning ship a lifeboat, in charge of First Officer E. Gardner, was lowered. After fighting for two hours to get close to the Volturno the fight had to be given up. The lifeboat returned with all the oars save three smashed. The men were so exhausted they had to be half carried on deck.

Shortly after 3 p. m. Thursday the Seydlitz arrived on the scene. Later more ships put in an appearance. Nothing could be done on account of the wind and waves. Nothing could be more heartrending than our enforced idleness, standing by in sight of the destruction of the ship without being able to give any aid.

Captain Inch all the time kept signaling "Can't something be done to help us? We must abandon the ship. The plates are buckling. Stand by, for we will have to jump for it soon."

About 9 p. m. the flames burst out admidships, near the forward funnel, lighting up the surrounding seas. In a few minutes all the ship from the forward funnel to the forecastle was on fire with the flames leaping high into the air. Through the flames and the smoke the bridge was visible now and then. The wind dropped slightly about this time which was a good thing for it prevented the flames from being carried into the faces of the refugees in the after part of the vessel.

The smaller vessels which had come up were able to get quite close to the Volturno; the Carmania being a big liner and less easy to handle had to stand farther off.

The Carmania and the other ships kept swinging their searchlights over the water all night in order to give aid to any of the Volturno's passengers who might have jumped into the water. During the night a cry for help was heard close to our bows. The searchlight was turned in that direction and a man, supported by a life belt, was seen swimming toward us.

Sailor's Brave Rescue.

Chief Officer Johnstone and First Officer Gardner descended the ladders with life lines, but on account of the high sea and the exhausted condition of the man the rescue could not be effected. Able-seaman Heighway then volunteered to go over the side and try to save the swimmer. Tying a life belt around himself and attaching a life line to it, he plunged into the water. After a hard fight he reached the side of the exhausted man and tied a line to his belt. Then both were hauled on board.

The refugee was so exhausted that he had to be taken into the hospital for treatment. He was in an unconscious condition. When he was revived he said he was Walter Trintepont, a passenger on the Volturno. The soles on his boots were half burned through, showing the intense heat of the decks upon the Volturno.

At daybreak Friday the seas subsided and boats were lowered. While the Carmania directed the operations of rescue, she gave way to the smaller ships, which were able to get nearer to the Volturno. This accounted for the fact that the little ships got a larger number of the rescued passengers.

Captain Inch of the Volturno was the last man to leave his ship. With him were the two Marconi operators and the chief engineers. They were taken off by a small boat from the Kroonland.

For several hours the ships cruised around trying to get trace of the missing boats before proceeding on their way. Five hundred and twenty-one persons were saved and 136 were missing.

PATHETIC SCENES AT THE NEW YORK STEAMSHIP OFFICE

NEW YORK, Oct. 13.—Pathetic scenes were witnessed at the Uranium office here today. Friends and relatives of the survivors anxiously awaited news.

The saddest figure was that of Sarah Barber of No. 278 Madison street, whose brother, Jessel Barber, was a first cabin passenger on the ship.

Previous sorrows which had left the brother and sister the sole members of a family often had bound them closer together and intensified the girl's grief. Sarah came to this country and worked until she could save enough money to send for her brother, who was in Kishineff, Russia. Finally the coveted sum was raised and Jessel Barber started for America on the Volturno. The other members of the family had been killed in massacres at Kishineff. Officers of the Uranium line were calmly considered by the frantic girl the world of her brother. Her lamentations moved all who heard her and she was given what comfort was possible by representatives of the line. They pointed out that as many of the crew had crowded into lifeboats the chances were in favor of the passengers.

Find Girl Ill in Gas-Filled Room

Hilda Martin Dunden, nineteen, employed since last Friday as a servant in the home of William H. Cleaves, No. 6 Norfolk terrace, Dorchester, was found in her room today suffering from gas poisoning. Her employer believed she had turned the gas on accidentally. She was treated at City Hospital.

Urges Baptist Flag for Convention

Baptist banners were advocated at the business meeting of the Baptist ministers today in Tremont Temple by the Rev. Charles Thurlow of North Scituate. "We want the business men to have out banners in front of their stores next May when our International Baptist Convention meets here in Boston," said Mr. Thurlow.

Supreme Court Opens.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 13.—The Supreme Court of the United States will be sworn in today for another year. Chief Justice White will administer the oath of office to the Presidents.

MISPLAYS LOST BIG SERIES FOR NEW YORKERS

By PAUL ARMSTRONG.
America's Famous Playwright.

NEW YORK, Oct. 13.—Once more the Athletics of Philadelphia are the world's champions.

Hurrah! Bravo! Long live the champs!

Paul Armstrong

According to McGraw there is on that team the one best ballplayer living;

According to the pitchers there is on that team the one most dangerous batter;

Baker.

As a personal opinion the Athletics are just about the best working ball players seen in ten years.

They have got everything—speed, courage, hitting ability, accuracy and youth.

There is an esprit de corps, an understanding, a get-together, a desire to win for the sake of the game that youth alone knows.

Errors Beat the Giants.

Baseball experts agree that the score of the final game should have been 1 to 0 in favor of New York. Errors and errors alone threw the game.

The series ended in a swan-song of errors.

The first game began by giving a game on errors.

The second was won in spite of them.

The third gave the visitors two runs on a wild heave at first base that landed in the eleventh row of seats.

The next was blown on three deadly errors and the last game was another of those "sickening things."

Some day the National League clubs who think they would like a pennant will do business with the Black Hand and have McGraw and Matty captured and spirited away to some lonely isle. And then what do you think will happen.

Listen!

The New York Giants will be battling with St. Louis for last place.

Only Three Giant Stars.

And eht of the series but three match for the Giants signify anything but helplessness. Mathewson, who has proven again that he is the premier pitcher of baseball; McLean, who caught and hit and thought, and George Wilise, who in one flash showed that he had more baseball value than any three of the lineup, picked after the greatest shuffling.

Demaree, an ugly little chico pitcher, was buried under a shower of errors. Ressegun never got his day and Marquard, with two chances, only proved that he has slipped backward.

The Athletics showed but one new pitcher, Bush, who had so much the best of it that no line could be got on his real value.

Bender tried twice. Once four runs were made off him and the next time five. That will not do for a champ. Plank got away better the second time than the first, but he had a lead. Without runs to help him he fell apart in the ninth.

Still of the two he looks best, but it is doubtful if either of them will ever win a world's series again.

In fact, if the youngsters are not pretty good, the Athletics may be years in winning another.

And the Poor Magnates (?)

But Bender and Plank lived to trim the Giants, and whether those believe it or not, that is some honor.

The great tragedy of the series is that it ended before the poor baseball magnates got a hundred thousand or so. They let the players have the first four, so they go hungry this time—poor magnates.

And McGraw shook Connie Mack's hand, and Connie made a speech, while Mcgraw "got to" some pals and suggested that the world's series be forgotten as soon as possible.

It was done. But every now and then Mac would say: "I wish I had that Collins."

Kismet.

Walter Johnson, leading pitcher of major leagues.

Ty Cobb, who again heads American batsmen.

Jake Daubert, foremost batsman in National League.

COMMISSION HOLDS UP THE GIANTS' MONEY

NEW YORK, Oct. 13.—When the New York Giants applied to the National Commission for the losers' share of the World's series receipts, they were informed that the Commission wished first to see the contracts of the player-authors who are members of the Giants so that it might be assured their engagements to report the world's series were entered into before Sept. 27.

Before the start of the series the National Commission laid down the rule that no baseball player or manager might write for the newspapers during any future world's series. It was decided, however, that players who had contracts signed before September 27 might get ahead with their writing this year. Half a dozen members of the Giants were newspaper articles on the series during the play of last week. Now the commission wants to inspect their contracts before it turns over the series money to them. It was declared last Monday that those player-authors who could not produce bona fide contracts signed before the date specified would be penalized, but it did not announce the penalty.

As a matter of fact no penalty is likely to be inflicted and the Giants' share of approximately $2162 each in the series money will probably be turned over to the men in short order practically intact, as it is believed all of the writing men among them can produce properly attested contracts antedating the commission's announcement of its ban upon player authorship.

Cubs and White Sox in Sixth Battle

CHICAGO, Oct. 13.—The sixth battle between the Cubs and White Sox for the baseball championship of Chicago was on today under perfect weather conditions. A long waiting line at the Sox Park today assured the club owners of a capacity crowd. Interest in the series was heightened by yesterday's game, which went eleven innings, the Sox scoring two in the last frame and winning.

Matty May Be Harvard Lecturer

Lectureships on football, baseball, track athletics and other sports are being advocated at Harvard. It is announced that Christy Mathewson and "Home Run" Baker may lecture in Cambridge at an early date, and that their talks may prove the practical basis of a plan for continuous athletic lectures.

Nearly everybody in Boston reads the AMERICAN.

Matty and Plank Praised from Pulpit

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 13.—Mathewson in the ninth inning" was the subject of a sermon by Rev. Augustus Barneg from the pulpit of the Church of Our Redeemer. He saw the Eddie and Matty duel on Wednesday.

"In that last inning," said the minister, "I saw the finest display of the result of clean living I ever expect to witness. Two gladiators, each at the zenith of his career, pitched superbly, as only men could who had conserved their strength by clean and wholesome life.

"With two men on bases and one out Mathewson's eye was as steady as his brain was clear. He won for his teammates because he had all of that energy saved for the vital moment when he really needed it. 'Matty' couldn't have delivered at that crucial time if his nerves had been tense, his brain befuddled or his eyes befogged by any of the indiscretions so common to the men of today."

IF THEY ONLY DO WHAT THEY SAY--ALL RIGHT

By FRANK G. MENKE.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 13.—The majority of these world's champion Athletics who today were each mailed a check for approximately $3,280, besides what they picked up "on the side," are going to use their winnings in buying farms, investing it in business, educating themselves or laying it aside for the "rainy day," while a few of them are going to spend a small part of it doing such frivolous things as taking a trip abroad or buying a new automobile.

"My check goes to the bank to stay with the little wad I have there now," said Captain Eddie Collins. "Some of these days when my account gets quite sizeable I'll look around for some investment that will bring me clear returns when my ball playing days are over."

"Chief" Bender, pitcher—"My money goes into the bank. Some day I may need it."

Ira Owns a Whole County.

Ira Thomas, catcher—"I own forty-two houses and two stores in Philadelphia. That $3,280 will enable me to build about two more houses and I'm going to purchase as soon as I find some good ones."

Eddie Plank, pitcher—"I may put my money in the bank. I may invest it form down my way [illegible] to buy it.

Jack Barry, shortstop—"I have a small interest now in a garage in my home town, Worcester, Mass. I may put my money invest my world's series winnings in it, making a bigger share.

Frank Baker, third baseman—"Into the bank for mine. Don't [illegible] use as security. I'm going to buy a farm. I've got several farms already. When I get through with baseball, I hope to go into some other business than farming."

Rube Oldring, left fielder—"The only thing that check reaches me is on going to move over to New Jersey and buy a farm. Just I took an option on a [illegible] farm when it looked as if we would [illegible] grab the pennant."

Eddie Murphy, right fielder—"I'm going to use part of my money in buying a new automobile, trading in my present machine in part payment. The rest of it will buy a farm somewhere around White Mills."

Amos Strunk, centrefielder—"I haven't made up my mind yet. For the time being I'll put the money in the bank."

Jim Murphy, utility outfielder—"I've got a cafe up in Norwich, Ct. It will require bigger dividends if I enlarge it, so I'll improve the looks of the place, and I am going to use the larger part of the money making these changes."

HARVARD FOOTBALL WARRIORS PREPARING FOR HARD GAMES AGAINST RIVALS ON GRIDIRON

Start Bolstering Up Harvard Weak Points

First String Men Rest Up Today, But Get Down to Hard Work Again Tomorrow.

By SYDE LYNES.

WITH the baseball season safely out of the way for the next year, except for some of the post mortems, that will surely crop out now and then, the noble tribe of those who would feign air their views on college football, have an opportunity of expanding their typographical lungs. Here goes.

The developments on the college gridiron, that is among the bigger teams in the East, were nothing out of the ordinary, and in some instances there were disappointments. That is, adherents had counted on their particular favorites doing certain things, and the conditions which existed on practically all the gridirons in this section of the country, prevented their consummation. Poorer conditions could hardly have been imagined, and the results, fumbling and poor running, were inevitable.

Weaknesses Discovered.

HARVARD'S showing against Williams while not up to scratch, or what had been hoped for, after the week of the hardest kind of work, was good under the circumstances, and showed up a number of weaknesses, which will be of aid to the coaches this week in smoothing out the playing of the eleven.

Incidentally it may be mentioned that the first string men on the Crimson squad are given a rest today, in honor of the landing of Mr. Columbus, who, as we all know, meant a great deal to Harvard football, inasmuch as his landing indirectly made it possible to have games in Cambridge. The subs and the second eleven will get together and have it out all by their lonesome this afternoon, while their betters are eating mince pie and drinking cider in preparation for the game with Holy Cross this Saturday. Tomorrow the work will stiffen up for the first string men, and mince pie will be cut out, and perhaps the more strenuous exercise of cross-country for endurance and distance will be substituted. Heigh-ho, time alone must decide this, however.

Teamwork Best Yet.

HARVARD showed a decided weakness in sizing up the forward pass formations against the Purple, and the Crimson's weakness in this line made it possible for Williams to penetrate that most holy thing, the Crimson goal.

Harvard showed a greater amount of real teamwork Saturday than in any former time, the line charging as a unit. There was one fault and a very material one, however, and it was the sudden weakening of the Harvard attack after it had crushed the Williams' line backward a few feet. It may have been the strength of the Purple line, but we think not. Harvard simply did not get into it in the way it should have done. In short there was not the proper fight spirit shown that puts the punch into the attack. The Crimson men may not be making the mistake of feeling that they have all their games won, but it certainly looked last Saturday as though they felt pretty sure of themselves. The result of the sudden weakening of the attack after pushing the Williams' line back was that the back carrying the ball was usually brought up short after a gain of a couple of yards. In short the secondary defence was usually not disposed of, and long gains through the line were the results of individual efforts.

Tackles Played Fine Game.

STORER and Hitchcock played games that were very creditable, both preventing any gains through their positions, while their work behind the line was good, and frequently they were down the field with the ends.

Speaking of the ends, Coolidge did not show up in expected form, several times being drawn in, when his position was to drive the runner into the tackle or secondary defence. The result in each instance was the natural one,—a gain. His downfield work as well as that of O'Brien, was fast and accurate, and the tackling particularly good in view of the slimy condition of everything.

On the whole the tackling of the entire Crimson eleven was good, Hardwick shining particularly in this department of the game.

Interference was good at times, but erratic. Brickley was an offender a number of times, when his failure to put his man out of the play meant a failure to gain greater distance.

Very Little Fumbling.

IN view of the nasty state of the pigskin, there was a surprisingly little fumbling. Logan seemed to have pretty thoroughly disposed of his weakness in this direction, when he ran the Crimson eleven. His generalship was good and kept the men on their toes all the time, while Watson also loomed up strongly as a candidate for counciling to do later on in the generalship line, in case of an emergency.

Pirates Win Toss For Seventh Game

CLEVELAND, O., Oct. 13.—Manager Fred Clarke of the Pittsburgh Nationals won the toss up and elected to play the seventh game of the post-season series with the Cleveland Americans, if there should be a seventh game, at Pittsburgh next Tuesday. The series now stands three games to two in favor of Pittsburgh. The teams play there today.

MITCHELL'S SIDELIGHTS ON SPORTS

NEW YORK, Oct. 13.—Two major league ball players, friends of many years' standing, have disclosed to me the following information:

Eighty-five per cent. of the players under reserve to the four biggest baseball leagues in the country—namely, the National League, the American League, the American Association and the International League, have handed together in solemn agreement not to sign contracts with their clubs for next season unless certain demands they are to formally make in a short time are complied with. These demands are seventeen in number and embrace all the grievances—real or fancied—that the ball players can think of. The three principal demands are these.

THAT when waivers are asked on a player all the clubs of major leagues be required to waive on that player before he can be sent to a minor organization. Under certain conditions as the rule now stands, if a National League club desires waivers on a player it is only necessary for the club to obtain the consent of the other seven clubs in the National League in order to send the player to any minor league club it sees fit. The same league players desire that in a case like this the American League clubs as well as the National League clubs, be required to waive also. In other words, while no clubs in the National League may waste the services of the player for whom waivers have been asked, one or more clubs in the American League may desire the player's services, in which case the player would not be forced to "go long for the minors."

That if a major club asks waivers on a player and one of the other major league clubs refuses to waive, subject to his services, the player must be sold to the club refusing to waive. As the case now stands a club is allowed to withdraw its request for waivers when it is found that one club refuses to waive. Later waivers may again be asked on the same player and the club that at first refused to waive consents to do so on the second request, as it then has no use for the player in question. For example: The Red Sox may desire to secure one of their pitchers in a minor league club in exchange for a first baseman. Before completing the trade, however, the other eight American League clubs must be asked to waive claim to the Red Sox catcher. Suppose the New York club is badly in need of a catcher and refuses to waive. The Red Sox management then recalls its request for waivers, waits a month and again asks waivers on the same catcher. In the meantime the New York club has secured a suitable backstop and having no use for the Red Sox catcher, waives claim to him as it would asking Pres. Frazee's club then gets in touch with the deal, and the catcher goes back to the minors. The major league players demand that if a club refuses to waive, it shall have the privilege of securing the player instead of the first club withdrawing its request for waivers.

THAT when a major league player is sold to a minor league club that has not during the season the salary paid by the major league club shall hold good in the club to which he is sold. Under the present arrangement a player signs a contract with a major league club before the playing season begins and if he is sold to a minor league club during the season his salary is liable to be cut to a minor league figure. The ball players claim this is a rank injustice and will demand that the rule be abrogated.

THERE are the principal demands. The others are of a minor importance. The players have been busy all Summer making a list of their grievances. They have an organization called the Baseball Players' Fraternity, of which David Fultz, the former American League outfielder and a New York lawyer, is president and counsel. The organization nearly died of dry rot early in the year, but was brought to life again and now nearly all the major league players are strongly united. This was brought about by the activities of one man in each club in the Boston National League club ramp Hub Perdue was at the head of the chapter, but Hub did not pay much attention to business and he was deposed. Hap Myers began at once to get the players in line. He took them to task for their back dues and sign a new agreement in which they pledged not to sign a contract for next year until the demands of the players had been granted by the major leagues. The same thing transpired in the other three clubs of the two major leagues, so I am informed, so that now the players are in a position to present a solid front.

MILLER TO BOX TONY ROSS AT THE ATLAS A. A.

By JACK CONWAY.

CHARLEY MILLER, the powerful "white hope" from California, will clash with Tony Ross, of Boston, Pa., in the feature bout of twelve rounds at the Atlas A. A. tomorrow night. Miller is considered one of the most promising white hope fighters in the business.

He was born in Roseanda on April 5, 1888, which makes him twenty-four years of age. He is a giant in size, being over six feet tall and weighing 220 pounds.

The big boy first showed his ability in four-round contests in California, where he fought such men as "Jamaican" Smith, "Battling" Johnson, Jim Barry, Jack Gerber, Al Kaufman, Jess Pelgen, Frank Moran and Jack Langford.

Two Westerners recently came East and in the first month in this country both of the unlucky gave Al Palzer a rugged battle, the honors being pretty much even in each of the affairs of Saturday.

Miller's reference as will win the white heavyweight championship. He says he is not afraid to exchange punches with any one of the white giant wielders.

Ross stands five Miller a hard battle. He is not a clever boxer, but there are few white heavyweights who can outpunch him. Ross was fought almost all of the heavyweight boxers who have been prominent during the past decade. He was defeated in the maulers were Mike Schreck, Jim Flynn, Big Barry, Al Kaufman, Jack Johnson and Sam Langford.

There will be an eight-round semi-final match between Henry Hall and Terry Martin. These will also be two good preliminary bouts. In one of them Johnny O'Brien, the popular Roxbury boy who made such a showing record in the amateur ranks, will exchange punches with Teddy Murphy of this city.

MACK IN LOWELL BOUT.

FRANKIE MACK, the skilful Beach mont lightweight, will meet a worthy opponent when he fights Ray Wood, of Fall River, in a twelve-round go at Lowell Friday evening. Mack is a big favorite in the Spindle City and has a record of one victory over "K. O." Sweeney, the New York lightweight.

Wood, who is the middleweight of Homer Gardner, who has forgotten more about boxing than the average fan will ever learn, already believes he will be able to destroy Mack's luke warm style. Jack Fox, of Lowell, the matching Nancy Hall instructor, will referee the bout. Fox was a boxer of the semi-final kind of stuff himself. McFarland conquered Young Ahearn in his last bout, and is not slated for an advancing the information that he will soon be given a chance in his contest with Gans.

WANT MURPHY-BRITTON GO.

BOSTON boxing fans are still clamoring for a bout between Eddie Murphy and Jack Britton. A contest between these two rivals would be the biggest card that the Atlas Athletic Association has arranged.

Britton knocked out the South Boston lightweight in eleven rounds at the Fitzgerald A. A. a few years ago and Jimmy Murphy, however, came back and made things look so rosy that Britton in a whirl in the Middle West a few months later.

WRESTLERS TO OPEN SEASON HERE TODAY

The first intercollegiate series of wrestling events to be held this season will be staged this afternoon in Mechanics Building, when three pairs of well-matched men will struggle for the honors of meeting other grapplers later in the season.

The three pairs chosen Promoter Tuohey has brought together promises some rare sport, and especially in the main event, when Youssef Hussane, the clever Turkish mat star, will mix up with Paul Morrissey in a finish bout that will most decidedly atone for the year, as the return of the Mighty Pole from Europe, has been looked forward to with pleasure by Hub fans. Hussane has been seen several times in Boston, while Morrissey has proven himself one of the best of the middles in the past year. Both men are over the 200 pound mark, and the battle is looked for this afternoon to battle the result second to one of the hardest and cleverest mat engagements that has ever been decided in the East.

The semi-final is expected to be full of fireworks, with Frank Gotch, Italian dreamer, taking on Lagrasso, the husky Frenchman who they report likes to go at it in a rough and tumble way. Just what kind of a pass the other fellow may make at Gotch is likely to fly before the arena is cleared.

In the opening affair Jim Pollock, the rough Irish wrestler, will try to settle accounts with John Cassell, the Polish middleweight in their last meeting, which ended in a draw, after a debate of winning title afternoon.

All three matches will be best two out of three falls, with the time limit for the one fall taking the seat at 2 o'clock.

Vardon and Ray Beat Atlanta Golfers

ATLANTA, Ga., Oct. 13.—Harry Vardon and Edward Ray, English golfers, defeated Jesse and Will McKenzie, local professionals, 3 up and 2 to play, in the second round of the Piedmont tournament. The visitors were 3 up at the end of the two morning rounds over Vardon's 71 to 74.

Injured Williams Player Improved

B. B. Newton, the Williams College end who was injured in the Harvard-Williams game saturday, was improved and will be able to return to Williamstown within a few days.

Have you ever watched boys "in swimmin'"? One lad finds himself in the water. He frolics, splashes and plays. Soon another joins him. The first becomes ambitious. He strikes out, listlessly at first. Little Bobbie's Pa

THERE is a yung gentleman coming to the house tonite, sed Pa, that is just out of school. His naim is Jones & he is the son of old Walt Jones that used to rough it with me in the grate Northwest. Walt was a stinco of a fellow, sed Pa, & I suppose his son will be a good deal like him, big & powerful fearless.

That doesnt always follow, sed Ma. I knew lots of sons that arent like there fathers. Look at Ethel Robbie. Nobody ever herd him brag about himself.

That was a unnecessary reemark, & it wasent very funny, sed Pa. Old Walt Jones was one man in a million, anyway you took him. I saw him lick three half breeds up in Canada one time. He dropped the three of them in about as many seconds, Pa sed, & they stayed down. I hope his boy is like him.

Last evening yung Mister Jones called, sure enuff. He wasent a bit like Pa sed his father looked, because he was slim & soft looking, like a litte Lord Fauntleroy growed up. I could see that Pa dident warm up much wen he looked at yung Mr. Jones. His naim was Oswald.

After a while Ma asked Oswald Jones what he was going to talk up for a profeshun.

I have decided to embark on the sea of journalism, he sed to Pa & Ma.

Well, sed Pa, that is sum sea, journalism. I know a few tuff old sailors in that grain. Pa sed, & they have to be rite on the job to keep from sinking. I guess there is moar yung men embarking on that sea & fewer that ever gits back to dry land than all the lawyers & doctors rolled together. I wish you success, yung man, sed Pa, & hoap you will beekum a star in the game.

I am not entering the feeld as a nuvice, sed Oswald. You must not think you are talking to a child. I have had sum experience on my college paper.

Reely? sed Pa. Well, I suppose it all helps, but writing for a college paper edited by boys and trying to mak good with a city editor that has had thirty years of ruff expecrience are two different things. I know a cupple of city editors, sed Pa, & you can beelieve me wen I assure you that they keep all thare kind words & pleasant looks for thare friends & families. If one of them ever patted a reporter on the back the reporter wud drop ded, Pa told Oswald.

I shall not have many dealings with city editors, sed Oswald. I am a humorist. I rite the jokes for the college paper. Here is one:

Deepthinker: My bed aches.

His wife: What makes yure bed ache?

Deepthinker: I think so.

His wife: Dount you know?

Deepthinker: Of course I know. I think so.

You see, sed Oswald, he ment his bed ached beekaus he thought so hard. But when he said "I think so," his wife thought he ment he wasnt quite sure. That I deeside to go with. Now do you think I am a mere beginner?

I think so, sed Pa.

The Chapeau Chic

Two delightful Paris hats fully described by Olivette

Of mole-gray velvet

In the new blue shade

By OLIVETTE

OF the wonderful new shade known as cerbean blue is this most original chapeau Parisienne on the right. The brim is as narrow as brim can be on the right, and as high as it can be on the left, where it extends to just three times the height of the Tam O'Shanter crown. Caught to the high inner brim on the left are two splendid fans of ostrich and an aigrette of sumbdie.

This hat of mole-gray velvet on the left shows the sharply turned-up brim which is finding much favor in Paris this Autumn.

The underbrim is of soft velvet, the top may be either of velvet or of plush, or even of felt cloth to match the suit with which it is worn.

A cord of the velvet edges the brim, which widens and turns up abruptly at the left, where it is trimmed by a quill and down curling plume of soft mole-covered ostrich.

For wear with afternoon gowns or with a tailor-made suit this hat would be particularly appropriate.

You will find it most attractive when made entirely of the mole-gray velvet.

THE KING OF DIAMONDS

BY LOUIS TRACY

A THRILLING STORY OF A MODERN MONTE CRISTO

TODAY'S INSTALMENT

Copyright, 1904, by Edward J. Clode

MASON wobbled his head and craned his neck awkwardly.

"Do gev me that crack on the nut?" he asked.

"The roof dropped," was the jocular reply.

"Not it. I 'ad yer dahn, Sailor. I was on yer attire yo could use yer silk. Ya was faitly beated until somebody ahted me wife a welt on the skylight."

"Never mind, Jocky. It'll hurt you to think just now. Come on."

But the ex-convict became sensible of the unwonted light in the deserted house and slowly turned his head until his glances rested on Philip.

"Why," he roared, with an impression, "that's the bloomin' kid 'oo found the el-monds. I seed 'im a-comin' of 'em. White stones, the paper said, an' bits of iron, too. A trunk full of 'em. It 'as one fin 'is pocket as big as an egg."

The policeman laughed. So did Philip, shrilly, with ready acceptance of the cue.

"Come along, Jocky, you're wool-gethering. I'll get you a pint of coffee at the station, just to show there's no malice," said the constable.

"The water was too strong for him," put in Philip.

The ex-convict began to protest, but die wasted weeks in sweating. The "Sailor" grasped him by the arm and marched him down the yard, saying over his shoulder:

"Pull that door to. I'll come back for my coat in half an hour."

Philip followed, but in a sea of perplexity. He heard Mason's frantic expostulations to the policeman—what was an extra stripe to the loss of untold wealth—that youngster was richer than Rothschild, the papers said—the small lot he showed in the police court were worth fifty thousand pounds—and he had tons more.

It was all of no avail. Certainly the constable had never heard such queer reasons advanced for stopping an arrest, but Mason was obviously dazed for the time—meandering about the story which everybody talked of. He would change his tune when he learned to whom he was indebted for his capture.

The boy walked behind them mechanically, fondling the candle with his hand. He was so absorbed with his tumultuous thoughts that the first indication he received of anything bizarre in his appearance was the giggling of a girl who saw him standing in the arch of the mews carefully shielding the flickering wick.

He blew it out. A clock in the small jeweler's shop opposite showed the time—ten minutes past eleven. In that part of London, a busy hive of men and women of the working class, he had no chance of removing his belongings before the policeman returned.

What would happen if the friendly constable believed Jocky Mason's excited statements? True, Philip had no reason to fear the law. But with exposure might come other troubles. Would any one advance a claim to his motor? Mr. Abingdon hinted at such a thing. He paid no rent for his house; he might be turned out instantly—refused permission to remove anything except his few unstable household goods.

Assurredly he was in an awkward predicament. Of course, there was a chance that the policeman would continue to laugh at the convict's folly. If he did not, there would certainly be complications. Could he avoid them by any means? Where was there a safe hiding place for his diamonds until next day? Would mother Inspire him again as she had not failed to do during so many strange events? Would her spirit guide his footsteps across this new quicksand on whose verge he hesitated?

A few doors to the left was O'Brien's shop. The old man crept into sight, staggering under the weight of a shutter. Good gracious! Why had he not thought of this ally sooner? Some precious minutes were wasted already.

"Armh, Phil, phwat in the worruld"—

"Wait just the least bit, Mr. O'Brien. I have some portmanteaux that I want to store for the night. Do let me put them at the back of your shop. My place is not very safe, you know."

"Sure, boy, that's a small thing to ax. Bring 'em, an' welcome."

REMOVING THE JEWELS

With the speed of a deer Philip dived into the mews. He carried the two lesser bags without extraordinary difficulty, and deposited them behind O'Brien's counter. The third was almost too much for him, as the weight was all in one hand. But he got it there, breathless with the exertion.

He had to open the fourth and tear out the stuffing of paper. When filled with the packages taken from the fifth it was beyond his power to lift it. So he dragged it bodily along the mews and into the shop.

A passerby offered to help him.

"No, thanks," he managed to say, though the effort to speak calmly took away his remaining breath. "I am only taking it to the shop there."

The man glanced at the shop—it was a marine store dealer's—a place where lead and iron and brass found ready sale. He passed on.

"Be the forchun av war, Phil, where did yo get the illgant leather thrunks, an' phwat's in them?" inquired the astonished pensioner.

The boy bravely called a smile to his aid. "I have a big story to tell you one of these days, Mr. O'Brien, but I have no time tonight. These things will not be in your way until the morning."

"The divil a bit. If things go on as they are, there'll soon be room enough in the poor cold shop. To think, after all these years, that a muriderin' thief in the War Office——"

Philip was safe. He rapidly helped his friend to put up the shutters, and rushed back to No. 3. Even yet he was not quite prepared for eventualities. He ran upstairs and gathered a few articles belonging to his mother, articles he never endeavored to sell even when pinched by hunger.

The last dress she wore, her boots, a hat, an album with photographs, some toilet accessories from the tiny dressing table, the coverlet of the bed on which she died—these and kindred mementoes made a very credible bulk in the denuded portmanteau.

He gave one glance at the hole in the back yard as he went to the coal house for a fresh supply of coal. That must remain. It probably would not be seen. In any case it remained inexplicable.

He was stirring the fire when a tap sounded on the door and the policeman entered, followed by an inspector.

POSTUM

A prominent Philadelphia physician says:
"If, on discontinuing coffee, you feel tired, languid, and 'out of sorts,' the coffee had better be forever discontinued, for you are on the verge of inebriety."

Thousands of people have taken warning and proved that coffee was the cause of their headaches, biliousness and nervousness.

A great many former coffee drinkers, feeling the need of a hot drink with meals, now use

POSTUM

A rich, nourishing food-drink, with a delightful flavour much resembling high-grade Java. Postum is made from prime whole wheat, and a small percent of New Orleans molasses. Contains no caffeine or any other drug.

Postum comes in two forms.

Regular Postum requires fifteen to twenty minutes boiling to bring out the rich flavour and food value.

Instant Postum requires no boiling, but is made instantly by stirring a teaspoonful of the soluble powder in a cup of hot water and adding cream and sugar to taste.

Drink it instead of Coffee.

"There's a Reason"

"And He Found a Crooked Sixpence"

By WINIFRED BLACK

IT'S all there—every bit of it—in the Mother Goose book. The little boy showed me the pictures this very morning.

"There was a crooked man, and he went a crooked mile." Of course he did, poor, crooked man; he never could walk a straight one to save his life. "And he found a crooked sixpence"—crooked to be sure it was. If it had been straight it would have been in a good, sensible, straight purse somewhere, or in a till or anywhere else where good straight money goes. And it lay "against a crooked stile."

"He bought a crooked cat which caught a crooked mouse"—that's the only kind the poor, crooked cat ever does think of catching. "And they all lived together in the little crooked house"—poor, crooked things, poor, warped, twisted-out-of-honest-proportion creatures! I wonder if they thought they were happy, living in their crooked way in the little crooked house?

I suppose so. I know a crooked man who's so proud of being crooked that he never lets you forget it for one minute. He's always talking about "fools" and "easy marks" and something he calls "come ons." By these names, he means I have discovered, honest men and women who believe what they are told unless they have strong reasons for disbelieving it.

He was rich when I first knew the crooked man. He lived in a fine house in the fine part of a fine city. He had a stable full of fine horses, two automobiles, a French chef and a little black-eyed wife who wore as many diamonds as a Hindoo idol.

He's poor now, the Crooked Man—oh, very poor. So poor that he can't even hire anyone to send special meals to him at the prison where he is. And the blackeyed wife has run away with the chef. And the Crooked Man is quite alone, for all of the people who flattered him and laughed at his strange talk of "come ons" and "easy marks" are busy laughing at the jokes of the man who bought the Crooked Man's house after he went to the penitentiary.

I went to see the Crooked Man the other day. He could did a favor for one I love and I can't quite forget that—crooked though he is or may be. "Poor thing," I thought when I waited in the grey gloom of the warden's grey office for the Crooked Man to come from his cell. Poor thing. He'll want to talk about straight people now, I suppose.

But he didn't. He's crooked yet, the Crooked Man; born so and will stay so as long as he lives.

I don't think the Crooked Man likes straight money or honest prosperity. I believe he'd rather cheat someone out of one hundred dollars than earn a thousand fairly and honestly. That's how he is made. He isn't sorry for what he did that got him into the penitentiary—not he. He isn't a bit ashamed of it. He's ashamed of being caught—that's all. He feels foolish about that, but never mind when he gets out he'll show 'em—he'll fool 'em—the "honest men" who put him behind the bars. There must be something crooked about them. There is about every one. He'll find it out, he'll track 'em down, he'll get even—see if he doesn't.

Turn straight? Keep honest? Do the square thing? Why, he can't—poor, crooked man—he couldn't to save his life. That's why he thinks no one else can, either.

I wonder why?

It bors so little—the crooked money—and it's always crooked, too, the thing the crooked money buys, and nobody wants anything to do with it but crooked people. I'd rather be poor than have any of it, wouldn't you—poor and honest and self-respecting and light-hearted?

It's a kind of disease, the crooked way of looking at things. A disease like meningitis or locksaw or anything else dreadful and mysterious. Let's hope we never catch it. And if any friend of mine ever sees me stopping in my path to look even a little longingly at a crooked sixpence that happens to fall in my way, I hope that friend will love me well enough to turn me around in my tracks and keep turning me till I come to my senses. For I do not want to live in a "crooked house" or have anything to do with what a crooked sixpence will buy—do you?

SHARPENED WITS

Meeting the village postman upon his rounds the other morning, a gentleman noticed that his face looked as though it had been through a very bad time indeed.

"I say, postman," he said, "whatever is the matter with your face?"

"Well," replied the postman, "I was walking down the street yesterday reading a postcard—wrong thing to do, of course, but I was punished for it. A workman coming the opposite way lurched up against me, bit me in the mouth with a pickaxe and knocked a tooth out."

"Oh, that was quite a dental operation, wasn't it?" laughingly commented the gentleman, who sought to have a little joke.

"Well, no," replied the postman. "He said it was an axe-i-dental operation."

"Oh, that's too thin," said the gentle man.

"Not exactly," lisped the postman dryly. "It was tooth out."

4 reasons for H-O

1. The Steam-Cooked Flavor
The first thing your family will notice about H-O Oatmeal is its particularly fine flavor. Steam-cooking is the reason. By cooking H-O before it is rolled into flakes and doing it in sealed cookers no flavor is lost.

2. Its Quick Preparation
The steam-cooking of H-O lasts over two hours at a temperature away above boiling. This leaves little cooking for you to do—only 20 minutes. If you serve any other oatmeal you must cook it over two hours or else serve it underdone.

3. Its Easy Digestibility
Starch cooked through is splendid food. Starch partially cooked is indigestible. Oats are largely starch and need hours of cooking. H-O with 20 minutes on your stove is always fully digestible, due to the two hours of steam-cooking. Other oatmeals are usually served but partly cooked.

4. Its Low Cost
To cook H-O requires 1-7 the fuel that other oatmeal requires. H-O—much drier than others—packed in moisture-proof packages—sterilized at 400°—bulks up larger when cooked and costs less than one-half cent per dish.

[illegible]e Has a Sad Awakening When He Sees the Pretty Nurse in Her Street Clothes

By MAX

S[illegible]EPT. 18.—What a disappointment a nurse is when she gets off her uniform!

[illegible] hold on a moment! That is not [illegible] what I mean. I mean to say what [illegible]appointment she is when she gets [illegible] woman's ordinary clothes. If she is [illegible]disappointment when she gets off her [illegible]form, of course I don't know. I pre[illegible] however, that with her corset off, [illegible]er hair down and off too, that she [illegible] as if she were falling to pieces, [illegible] like any other woman.

[illegible] am judging, of course, by what I [illegible] read in the books. I read a great [illegible]y books.

My pretty nurse has worn stiff white [illegible]ea dresses with matronly white linen [illegible]rons, and a little white cap on her head, [illegible]aped so that in an emergency she could [illegible]und pills in it or use it for a bowl in [illegible]xing a mustard plaster—I am sure it [illegible] stiff enough—ever since she came. On [illegible]r walks with Manette she always wore [illegible] same costume and as she has never [illegible]e to town, I had never seen her in [illegible]r street clothes till today.

The occasion was a visit to the hotel [illegible]ar by. The suffragette said they had [illegible]ne orchestra and had invited the [illegible]rse over to dinner to hear it, and she [illegible] stiffly starched person, not content [illegible]ith hearing our wonderful tree orches[illegible], had accepted.

I was drinking a cup of beef tea, [illegible]d wishing I knew who invented the [illegible]ff, so I could throw a few rocks at [illegible] grave, when she appeared, and the [illegible]ock made me spill the beef tea all [illegible]r the pup who was taking a nap on [illegible] floor beside me. I hope it will do [illegible]m good. I was willing to make the [illegible]rifice.

[illegible]LAIN TALK

"I don't like you when you are not [illegible]nurse," I growled, with the privilege [illegible] enforced sick room familiarity had [illegible]ven me. "You look like Salvation [illegible]ll. Where's you're tambourine?"

She had on a dark green skirt, a red [illegible]id waist and her hat of dark blue [illegible]s so modish it covered all the pretty [illegible] which is in charming evidence un[illegible]der nurse's cap.

[illegible] told her a few days before that a [illegible] is irresistible to a patient pro rata [illegible] his helplessness, and I was quite [illegible] that if I had been blown up by a [illegible] explosion I'd have married her the [illegible] all of me came down. The [illegible] of her in her street clothes made [illegible]ange my mind.

[illegible] would take more than a boiler ex[illegible]n to make me propose to you with [illegible]dress on. There wouldn't be a [illegible]t of me that wouldn't protest," [illegible]ied at her, "at the prospect of [illegible] looking like you. Do you lead the [illegible]ade today?"

She made no reply, but went quick[illegible] into the house, and when she re[illegible]ned it was with an unusually large [illegible] of the most bitter medicine the [illegible]or had ordered for me. And she [illegible]de me take it, too.

"You will find, Mr. Max," as she waved [illegible]ly, "that even when your nurse [illegible] on what you call her Salvation Army [illegible]nes, she has her training on under[illegible]th."

I have decided, after thinking it over [illegible]ely, as such matters should be [illegible]ght over, that the reason she wears [illegible] Harry Lauder effects in colors is [illegible] she is compelled to wear white nine[illegible] of her time. In the one-tenth [illegible]r, her passion for colors demands [illegible]e wear all the colors she can hang [illegible]

[illegible] is the same reason that causes a [illegible]an who is growing old to bloom out [illegible]lors. When she is young she wears [illegible] colors, but when she gets old she [illegible]nly realizes what little time there [illegible] for wearing bright colors, so she [illegible] them on, regardless of good taste.

[illegible] has her authority for this in the [illegible] in delicate greens in the Spring, [illegible] the darkest of greens in the mid [illegible]mmer, they bloom forth in crimson [illegible] scarlet and gold in the Fall.

It is a passion for the bright raiment [illegible]at no woman will resist. I presume [illegible] nurse is so tired of all white that her [illegible]ght clothes are purple and green. It [illegible]uld be immodest to ask her, but in [illegible] capacity as a student of Woman and [illegible]ture, the question is entirely proper, [illegible]d may be illuminating.

Anyway, I take no more pills from a [illegible]man who looks like Salvation Nell. Undoubtedly I have been paying high [illegible]ges all these weeks to a stiffly starched white dress, with a stiffly starched cap on top. Richards doesn't wear a uniform, and that has blinded me to the fact that she is a natural born nurse.

Poor Richards! When I think of her I am reminded of the nurse's contention that men canonize the women they don't marry, for all the saints were old maids.

Sept. 19—The nurse came home last night long after I had fallen asleep, and woke me up by saying good-bye to some one.

A PUZZLE

"I am surprised," I remarked this morning, "that any man could go that far with you in those clothes you wore. If he could see you in that uniform it would be fatal, but I am quite sure you will never see HIM again."

"Don't be so sure," mockingly, and I felt that I had been too sure when he called this afternoon, a self-satisfied looking creature with a mustache like a walrus and the expression of an eel, and took her for a ride.

"You are making a mistake," I said, sarcastically, "to ride around in that Noah's Ark of an affair. It will spoil your pleasure in riding in my limousine when we get home."

She laughed and said nothing. And a woman, by the way, can laugh and say nothing and say more than any one who ever lived.

I have decided that if he comes tomorrow to take her for a ride I will develop a chill and keep her at home. It will not be difficult to shake out some new ailment if I see her in any more of her regulation clothes. Today she wore a purple hat with a pale blue feather, but I remembered the medicine of yesterday and said nothing.

In time, I will learn, like the pup, to protest only with my eyes.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

TELL HER SHE DISTRESSES YOU

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am eighteen, and have, for the past month, kept company with a young lady one year my junior. She treats me very nicely when I am alone with her, but as soon as some other gentlemen friends come along she seems to give me the cold shoulder and pay more attention to the other young men than she does me. Do you think that I ought to tell her about it or let her keep it up?

C. E. F.

IT is possible that your jealousy exaggerates her interest in other young men. You have been going with her only a month, and the friendship of the others may have prior claims. Frankness always pays. Ask her if she prefers their company to yours.

SEEK A HEART-WHOLE GIRL

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

Not long ago a friend of mine introduced me to a girl whom he knew, and to whom he is very much attached. I liked her very much and she seemed to care for me. We made an appointment for some time ahead, which she, however broke a few days later. Now I have good reasons to believe this friend persuaded her to break the date.

Do you think it advisable for me to write to her and ask her the trouble?

F. S. O.

YOU had better not interfere. There is evidently an understanding between the girl and your friend; she showed it by breaking the engagement with you. Of course she has the right to choose the man she prefers.

There is no reason why you should not be friends, but I would advise you to interest yourself in someone who is heart whole.

More Dignified Now

"When I was a tiny boy with ringlets," said the man with little hair, "they used to call me Archie."

"I suppose now they call you Archibald."

GAS, DYSPEPSIA AND INDIGESTION

"Pape's Diapepsin" settles sour, gassy stomachs in five minutes—Time It!

You don't want a slow remedy when your stomach is bad—or an uncertain one—or a harmful one—your stomach is too valuable; you mustn't injure it with drastic drugs.

Pape's Diapepsin is noted for its speed in giving relief; its harmlessness; its certain unfailing action in regulating sick, sour, gassy stomachs. Its millions of cures in indigestion, dyspepsia, gastritis and other stomach trouble has made it famous the world over.

Keep this perfect stomach doctor in your home—keep it handy—get a large fifty-cent case from any drug store, and then, if anyone should eat something which doesn't agree with them; if what they eat lays like lead, ferments and sours and forms gas; causes headache, dizziness and nausea; eructations of acid and undigested food—remember as soon as Pape's Diapepsin comes in contact with the stomach all such distress vanishes. Its promptness, certainty and ease in overcoming the worst stomach disorders is a revelation to those who try it.

RESINOL CURED BLISTERY, ITCHY HUMOR ON HANDS

St. Louis, Mo., June 9, 1913.—"My wife was troubled with what looked like water blisters on the back of her hands. They itched and burned so much that she had to be rubbing them most of the time. After a while they broke open and began running together, leaving a raw and very unsightly sore, so that she had to wear gloves whenever she went out.

"We tried a half-dozen different remedies and prescriptions, but to no avail, until one day I received a sample of Resinol Soap and Resinol Ointment. She got so much encouragement from the sample that I bought a large jar of Resinol Ointment and a cake of Resinol Soap. After using it about three nights we discovered a great improvement. In about a week a skin began to form, and the itching and burning ceased. After using only one jar of Resinol Ointment and a cake of Resinol Soap, she was entirely cured. This was six years ago and she has not been troubled since." (Signed) Charles Weber, 2628 Franklin Ave.

Better proof, even than such a letter, is to try Resinol yourself and see how quickly the trouble disappears. Resinol Ointment and Resinol Soap are sold by all druggists. For free trial, write to Dept. 15-R, Resinol, Baltimore, Md.

LUXURIANT EYELASHES AND EYEBROWS ARE THE FRAMES FOR YOUR EYES AND SHOULD BE GIVEN DAILY ATTENTION.

THIS WILL STIMULATE CIRCULATION.

THE HEALTH OF THE BODY HAS MUCH TO DO WITH THE EYES.

WHEN YOU ARE PERFECTLY WELL YOUR EYES WILL BE CLEAR AND BRIGHT.

The Coquettish Slant

The Piquant Expression of Half-veiled Eyes

By ANNA HELD

(Heading "Anna Held's All-Star Variete Jubilee," Under Management of John Cort.)

Copyright, 1913, International News Service.

EYES are the greatest single-handed champions of a woman's beauty.

Eyes are the windows of the soul and the index of the spirit.

And surely we all long to have clean, shining "windows" and an "index" that will tempt the world to read the volume to which they belong.

Beautiful, haunting eyes!

Surely you have often said that you would give a fortune to possess them!

Now give me your attention—and then give your eyes the benefit at the course of treatment I will describe. And I hope your goal will be reached without loss of fortune.

First, let us make sure of a suitable frame for our picture.

This means, let us see about acquiring luxuriant eyelashes and eyebrows. Every morning on arising brush the brows in a crescent and brush the lashes upward with a tiny brush well moistened in water. All growing things need water.

At night brush with another little brush you keep especially for this use.

But moisten this brush in slightly warmed vaseline or olive oil or oil of cocoanut.

Any pure, warm oil will stimulate the growth of hair.

Be very careful not to irritate the eyeball or to allow any of the oil to get into the eye.

Now we have a splendid dark frame for our picture. The next thing is to make our picture beautiful enough to shine out of the dark frame, which is a protector, too—and guards against dust and all harmful intruders.

THE FIRST RULE

The first rule to remember in studying the care of the eyes themselves is that the health of the body has much to do with the eyes.

If you are perfectly well, with glowing blood in healthy circulation, your eyes will be clear and bright. So in the care of your eyes, go back to the beginning and have your health good!

Each morning before you brush up the "frame" bathe the eyes in cold water.

Make a cup of the hand and dash cold water against each eye thirty times.

The shock of the cold water will stimulate circulation. Ah, madame, do not be lazy, I pray you.

Thirty little dashes of cold water for each eye, and they will feel as well as they look—and they will look ravissante!

Whenever you come in from the dusty streets follow this little "eye-drill"—thirty dashes of cold water.

If the muscles of the eyes ache dully, lay a bandage of hot water across the eyes and renew constantly for fifteen minutes.

Interest and Animation

Follow with fifteen minutes of compresses wrung out in ice water.

And now I shall tell you two of my pet secrets.

When I find that I have unbecoming pouches under my eyes, and the water massage will not remove them, I pack cold cream very tightly under the eyes and let it remain while I lie relaxed for fifteen minutes.

Then I wipe it off quite gently and rub deftly from the inner corner to the outer with a soft bit of old linen in which I have a piece of ice. And, finally, beginning at the inner corner of the eyebrow I pinch up the flesh under the brow firmly, but not roughly.

All this I can teach you, if you will but hearken. But, above all, I must make sure of teaching that the eye is as delicate as beautiful. Do not use any strong cosmetic or drug near this fine bit of mechanism. Do not use artificial aids to color or brighten. Do not mark with lines or paint where the brows may easily be if you will spend your time in acquiring them in reality instead of painting them on.

Except pure water, and a weak solution of boracic acid, such as any pharmacist knows well how to make, no foreign substance should ever enter the eye unless it has the ticket of admission from an oculist. Chere amie, will you learn this rule quite carefully by heart?

The clearness of health, the beauty of expression and the charm of sensible care are what your eyes need. More than this will harm instead of helping.

A LITTLE CHAPTER

And now unless I give you a little chapter on my own specialty—expression—you will say, "Ah, la belle Anna is a cat! She will tell us how to obtain 'les beaux yeaux,' but she will not tell us how to use them."

First, be sure that you feel—that you have something to express. Then simply throw that expression into your eyes. See how coquettish is the Japanese slant that I illustrate for you. Longuor is expressed by the half-shut eye. Interest and animation show in the round, wide-open eye.

In the large picture in the centre I am showing for you the piquant expression of half-veiled eyes.

The long lashes, the clear whites, the bright expression and the glinting light of mischief are all things you may acquire if you will express yourself and follow me.

The Dog in the Manger

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

"I AM a young girl of twenty-two," a very distressed young woman writes me, "and have been keeping company with a man of twenty-five for two years steady, and as yet he has never declared himself, or, in other words, has never asked me to marry him. He is always talking as though he had no intentions whatever; still he calls so steady and keeps telling me what a good, sensible girl I am, and hopes I will marry someone worthy of me.

"How can I know where I am at, as I now feel I ought to drop him. All our friends think we are engaged."

There are courts for those who offend against the statutes, and courts for the protection of juveniles, but no court in which punishment is provided for the man who sins against a girl and violates no law in the sinning.

There is no law providing punishment for the man who plays the dog in the manger with a girl. He can linger around for years, giving her every reason for hoping that he will some day marry her, leading every friend to think they are engaged and keeping away suitors who are more honorable and then drop her and escape all punishment!

ROBS HER YOUTH

He robs her of the freshness of her youth; he takes up her time; he estranges her from her friends; by his growls and marks he frightens other men away, and then, like the dog that he is, he runs away when he finds those who might learn to care for her have passed on and forgotten her.

Even now, after two years, this man is a little more attentive if he scents a rival. "I do not want you for a wife," his attitude declares, "but I don't intend to let any other man have you."

He enjoys her society without paying the price for it in rent and groceries. He has an agreeable place to loaf without any of the obligations that ownership attaches. He enjoys the sympathies and companionship of a woman, yet retains his freedom. He likes her. His two years' attention proves it, but he LOVES himself.

He hopes that some day she will marry a man who is worthy of her, and for two years has been building up a barricade to keep other men away, always leaving his own exits clear.

The girl who loves is the most helpless and defenceless of all God's creatures, and the more she loves the greater her helplessness. But no one has ever come forward with the suggestion of laws and courts for her relief.

When she is little more than a baby, with a heart as impressionable as wax, and a brain as immature and unreasonable as that of a child, a man twice her years is permitted to make love to her and no one interferes so long as he breaks no law. He can torture her with jealousy, torment her with his indifference and inflict upon the head of a child greater suffering that a woman twice her age can ever know, and escape unscathed to pastures new so long as he violates no moral law.

Or, like the man this unfortunate girl has attracted, he can hang around her door, keeping men away who are more honorable, and lope off like a hound when she has grown old and plain in waiting.

It isn't fair to the girls, and my heart cries out against the injustice done them. Loving and trusting and hopeful and weak, they are thrown on the mercies of the man who comes wooing—and no one stands ready with a hand powerful enough to make him woo like a man, and not like a dog or a cad.

NO AUTHORITY

There is no authority to compel this man to marry this girl, and she would be most unhappy if there were, for he is the most selfish of his sex. But somehow, somewhere he should be made to realize that he has sinned against a woman and must pay a penalty.

I want her to refuse to see him again. Love is the greatest gift life has to offer. It is worth more than life itself, and is the beginning, the end and the sum and substance of all happiness; but this man doesn't carry it in his hands.

She has mistaken him for the messenger of Love. Such a messenger is on his way to her; such a messenger is on his way to every girl. But he will pass on without delivering his message if he finds another man seemingly in possession.

Their Married Life

Helen Finally Engages a Young Girl, Clean and Willing, But Inexperienced

By MABEL HERBERT URNER

THE unswept steps and dingy doorway proclaimed the cheap rooming house as loudly as did the sign, "Furnished Rooms for Rent," in the window.

The door was opened by a strange looking creature—a tall, thin, wild-eyed woman, with yellow, shrivelled skin and frowsy black hair.

"I called to see the young woman who advertised for housework," faltered Helen.

"I am the young woman," glaring at Helen, defiantly. "I advertised."

"Oh, I—I see," murmured Helen, longing to turn and run down the steps, for there was something uncanny about this woman.

Her matted black hair was only a wig, which did not hide the closely shaved gray hair around her ears. She had closed the door and stood with her claw-like hand on the knob, and for a moment Helen felt a thrill of fear as she found herself alone with her in the darkened hall.

"I hope you ain't like those two gentlemen who were just here," she began, excitedly. "They asked me to go upstairs to get my references, and when I came back they were gone! No good will ever come to anybody," menacingly, "who treats a hard-working girl like that."

Had she been drinking, or was she under the influence of some drug? Helen was almost afraid of her.

SELF-PRAISE

"Now what kind of a girl did you want, ma'am?" she demanded shrilly.

"Just a young girl—quite a young girl for general housework," answered Helen nervously, edging toward the door.

"Well, there isn't any kind of housework that I can't do. I'm lookin' for a nice, quiet place, where somebody will appreciate a hard workin' girl. I kept house for Mrs. Eldridge—may be you've heard of the Eldridges of Roxbury? Well, ma'am, you could have wiped your handkerchief over her kitchen floor, and you wouldn't have found any dirt."

"Well there are several other girls I want to see before I engage any one," murmured Helen, thinking only of how she could get away. "I'll let you know if I"——

"You'll let me know?" wildly. "That's what they all say, and I never hear from 'em. I put in an ad. last month; a dozen people were here to see me, and they all went off sayin' 'I'll let you know!' Why can't you decide now? I'm ready to go back with you, if you want me."

"But I—I really wanted a younger girl." Helen felt that she was brutal in saying this, but she had to get away.

Through the glass in the door Helen saw a postman coming up the steps. He rang the jangling bell, the woman opened the door to take the mail and in a flash Helen had slipped out.

"So you want a young girl, eh?" she called shrilly after her. "Well I hope you get one—a giddy rattlebrain thing. No good comes to people who won't give an honest girl a chance to earn her livin'. You're just like the rest," and she turned back into the house and slammed the door.

Helen flew down the steps and almost ran around the corner to the next block. She wanted to get as far away from that house as she could. She felt it would be days before she could blot out the memory of those wild black eyes and claw-like hands.

THE NEXT

The next advertisement she had marked was of a "Young Irish girl lately landed."

Helen's heart sang when she saw that this, too, was a rooming house, but it was plainly a better class house. The steps, the entrance and the windows had the appearance of being well kept.

However, when she rang the bell, Helen was careful not to enter the vestibule. She would not chance a repetition of that last experience.

But this time the door was opened by a clean, wholesome-looking Irish girl. She wore a blue gingham dress, very short; a ruffled white apron and a neat white collar.

"Someone from this place advertised for housework," said Helen.

"Oh, yes; it was me, miss. Won't you come upstairs, miss?"

Unhesitatingly Helen followed the girl up to the large front room on the second floor. It was a typical "furnished room." Evidently it was not rented, for the dresser and mantel were bare, and a half-opened closet showed empty shelves and hooks.

"You've had some experience at general housework?" asked Helen kindly, trying to put the girl at ease, for she had liked her at once.

"In the old country, miss; but not here," in thick Irish brogue. "I've got a reference from a lady I worked for in Londonderry. Shall I get it, miss?"

"No; tell me about yourself first. How long have you been in this country?"

"Just two weeks next Saturday, miss."

"Then you're not working in this house?"

"Oh, no, miss. My uncle rooms here and I'm just stayin' here till I get a place. I've got a little room at the top; but my uncle's got the hallroom next to this," proudly.

HELEN CONFIDENT

Helen had heard the door bell jangle a moment before, and now a voice called from below: "Nora! A lady to see you!"

"Will you excuse me a minute, miss?" and she hurried down.

Even without seeing her reference Helen had made up her mind that she was just the type she wanted—a good, clean, wholesome Irish girl. But what if this woman downstairs should engage her first?

Just then a pleasant-faced old man came timidly to the door.

"Pardon me, ma'am, but I'm Nora's uncle. I heard her talking to you, and I'm very anxious that she should get a good place."

"Yes, that's right," smiled Helen, encouragingly, for she was glad to learn something of Nora from this uncle. "She just told me that she's been in this country only two weeks."

"Yes, ma'am, but she's been in the service in Ireland. Nora is a mighty good girl. She takes interest in her work and everybody likes her. Do you live here in the city, ma'am?"

Helen, feeling that she would have a better chance of getting Nora if she could win the confidence of her uncle, told him of their apartment and just what she expected of a girl.

"Yes, ma'am, that's just the kind of a place I'd like for Nora. I'll just go down and speak to her—she'll be right up again."

Helen could hear plainly the voices at the foot of the stairs, and she could not help but listen.

"And if you get through your work early some evenings I've no objection to your going out. If you're fast you can always get through by half past eight." The woman's voice was persuasive.

"Yes, miss, but I didn't think I wanted to go to the country. You see, I'd like to stay near Uncle if I can."

"But you can come in to see your uncle every other Sunday. We have excellent train service; it takes only forty minutes to come in. Now you better make up your mind to go out with me this afternoon."

As Helen strained to catch Nora's reply, she realized that she was listening. Her cheeks flushed as she went over to the window beyond the sound of their voices.

In a few moments the uncle entered again with an apologetic "I'm sorry, ma'am, to keep you waiting, but there's a lady downstairs who wants Nora to go home with her this afternoon. She seems to be a very nice lady, but I just told Nora I'd rather she would go with you. When a man gets to be my age, he can judge something of people's faces, and I think you'd be good to anybody that worked for you."

"I try to be," answered Helen, who could not resent the childlike simplicity of the old man.

"If you don't mind, I'll just show you a picture of Nora's mother," and he brought from the hall room an old-fashioned photograph.

It was a quaint picture of an old lady in her best black gown. The plain, honest face was unmistakably like Nora's.

"This was taken in Ireland?" as Helen noticed the photographer's stamp.

"Yes, ma'm, she was never out of Ireland. She was my only sister."

"And you've been rooming here for some time?" asked Helen, politely, for want of something to say.

"Oh, yes, ma'm, I've been rooming with Mrs. McCall for over six years. I'm a plumber by trade."

WHAT WARREN SAID

Nora herself now appeared with an awkward apology for having kept Helen waiting. She said quite frankly she was not going with the other lady because she did not want to go to the country.

Half an hour later Helen left the house with the promise of both Nora and her uncle that she would come tomorrow morning at 9 o'clock.

There was a drug store on the corner, and Helen rushed in to the telephone booth and joyfully called up Warren.

"Dear, I've got a girl—and I think she's going to be really good! She's green, of course, but she's clean and is willing, and looks like she'll learn very fast. She's coming in the morning."

"Well, don't get excited till you've got her on the job. Chances are somebody'll offer her more money and she won't turn up," was Warren's comforting comment.

BETTER THAN CALOMEL

Thousands Have Discovered Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets are a Harmless Substitute

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets—the substitute for calomel—are a mild but sure laxative, and their effect on the liver is almost instantaneous. They are the result of Dr. Edwards' determination not to treat liver and bowel complaints with calomel. His efforts to banish it brought out these little olive-colored tablets. These pleasant little tablets do the good that calomel does, but have no bad after effects. They don't injure the teeth like strong liquids or calomel. They take hold of the trouble and quickly correct it. Why cure the liver at the expense of the teeth? Calomel sometimes plays havoc with the gums. So do strong liquids. It is best not to take calomel, but let Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets take its place.

Most headaches, "dullness" and that lazy feeling come from constipation and a disordered liver. Take Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets when you feel "loggy" and "heavy." Note how they "clear" clouded brain and how they "perk up" the spirits. At 10c and 25c per box. The Olive Tablet Company, Columbus, O.

IS YOUR CHILD'S TONGUE COATED?

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated, it is a sure sign that your little one's stomach, liver and bowels need a gentle, thorough cleansing at once.

When peevish, cross, listless, pale, doesn't sleep, doesn't eat or act naturally, or is feverish, stomach sour, breath bad; has stomach-ache, sore throat, diarrhoea, full of cold, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, undigested food and sour bile gently moves out of its little bowels without griping, and you have a well, playful child again.

You needn't coax sick children to take this harmless "fruit laxative;" they love its delicious taste, and it always makes them feel splendid.

Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly on the bottle. Beware of counterfeits sold here. To be sure you get the genuine, ask to see that it is made by "California Fig Syrup Company." Refuse any other kind with contempt.

HOW TRUST COMPANY SERVES PUBLIC AND INVESTOR

The BOSTON AMERICAN publishes today, and will publish on successive Mondays, articles on "The Trust Company and Its Activities."

The articles will deal particularly with the relation of trust companies to the business communities, and will also give detailed information of value to investors. Every investor should read these articles, the first of which appears today.

The Trust Company and Its Activities

How It Serves Men and Women, and Firms and Corporations in a Variety of Ways—Growth of Title Insurance and the Administration of Estates

That the well established, conscientiously managed and fully equipped trust company is the most perfect instrument that has yet been devised for handling fiduciary matters in all their varied and complicated forms, is a fact that no thinking man or woman will dispute. It is a fact that all who run may read.

Take for the purposes of illustration some large institution of this kind among the "up to date" trust companies of the country and consider its wide scope. It conducts banking, savings, title, bond, trust, mortgage and safe deposit departments. It pays interest on check and savings accounts. It buys and sells stocks and bonds. It loans money on collateral and on bond and mortgage. It sells investment mortgages. It acts as guardian for minors. It makes real estate searches and it guarantees real estate titles.

It takes full charge of real estate and personal property. It acts as receiver, serves as administrator and executor of estates, and fills all the varied duties of a trustee. It acts as transfer agent and as registrar of the stocks and bonds of corporations. It gives free investment and general financial advice to beneficiaries under wills in which it is named as executor, and it performs a multiplicity of other duties.

With all its departments under one roof and under one general management it is to its patrons and to the public in general what might be called the department store of finance. To obtain its share of this great and diversified business the trust company must have directors who are well known—directors who have the unremitting confidence of the public; to discharge its duties properly and profitably it must have officers who know their business to all its branches, and in all its manifold intricacies; it must have experts in each department—men carefully trained in the particular duties assigned to them—and it must have ample and, in fact, great resources.

Unlike the individual, it must always be in a position to solve and handle not one financial problem of a given kind, but many perplexing cases of a complicated character. It must be in a position to assist the weak and to defy the mighty. It must be ready at all times and under all circumstances to act with not only courageous alacrity but with sound discretion and rare wisdom.

That is all essential because millions of dollars of other people's money are confidently and confidingly intrusted to its care. Its responsibility is correspondingly enormous. It dares not be negligent. It must always be vigilant. It must be armed to policy, liberal in action and unbendingly upright in duty. To insure all this it has its large force of employes, its trained department heads, its expert officers and its experienced and alert directors.

The perfect parts of this business machinery work independently and yet consensively. They give to the trust company and to its patrons, in any or all of its departments, not the mere opinion of an inexperienced individual, whose personal interests are elsewhere, but the calm and conscientious judgment of experts in whose minds each particular case becomes, for the time being, the sole concern of the institution. In that there is to be found a striking exemplification of the truism that "in union there is strength."

That strength not only aids, but protects, those who do business with the trust company. Their protection does not end there, however. In addition to this combined, well seasoned judgment there is the protective work of the auditing committee of the well organized company. That, in turn, is backed up by the audit of the outside expert accountants, who are employed from time to time, and over all is the unhampered and unrestrainable expert examination that is made officially at frequent and irregular intervals by the lynx-eyed independent examiners of the State Department of Banking. Under this varied and rigid inside and outside supervision the trust company must, of necessity, move along lines of honor and accuracy.

So well established has this fact become and so marked is the confidence of the public in the great institutions of this kind that their business is growing enormously, not only in their satisfaction, but to the financial well being and the peace of mind of those who patronize them. In no part of the trust company's field of endeavor is this growth more clearly demonstrated than in its title and trust departments.

Until within comparatively recent years real estate title-insurance, where it was known, was looked upon as something that might properly be classified as a luxury, if not a fad. Time, however, has uncovered so many deplorable cases in which the lack of this form of insurance meant financial loss, if not financial ruin, that title guarantees are now regarded by both buyers and sellers of real estate as absolute necessities.

Individuals and not a few corporations are no longer content with mere searchers or title abstracts. They have discovered, sometimes to their sorrow, that abstracts are simply histories of titles; that searchers are not much more, and that neither one nor the other gives real estate owners financial protection in case of invalidating flaws. They have learned that these flaws spring from a great variety of sudden and unsuspected causes, and they have come to realize that protection against them is as essential as life or fire insurance. In seeking this title insurance they are going, for obvious reasons, to the institutions that by reason of their reputation and experience, their equipment and their large resources, are able to not only handle this business properly, but to pay inevitable losses, however large, without delay or quibble.

Actuated by much the same line of sound reasoning men and women in all walks of life are going to the trust company with their fiduciary business. That business embraces every conceivable form of trust, not the least of which are the exacting duties of the executor of estates.

In that field the growth of the trust company has been pronounced. To understand the reason for this is not difficult. Take again the case of the up-to-date trust company. It is well known that such an institution makes a specialty of administering estates. The experts whom it has assigned to this important work are trained specialists. They have made practically nothing else for years. They have no other duties to perform. They have no other business calls upon their intellect or their time. To their work they can give and do give, and must give, their undivided attention and judgment. What they do, moreover, is subjected to an elaborate, but smoothly working system of checking. All that they do is examined and passed upon by one or more of the company's officers and by its executive committee. Much of it is submitted to the combined judgment of the institution's directors, and all of it looked up by the company's resources and by its reputation, which it guards with unrelaxing care.

Under these conditions it is not remarkable that a steadily increasing number of men and women are naming the trust company as the executor of their estates. With them it is a simple matter of choosing between corporate experience and responsibility and individual experience and unreliability. Between the two, with little, if any, difference in the cost, testators are no longer hesitating. They understand the immense advantages in the care of estates that the trust company has over the individual, experienced or inexperienced.

It is big; it is fearless; it never forgets; it is never "out"; it takes no vacation; it can never be "disappear"; it has had wide and varied experience; it cannot be frightened by threats; it is a perpetual institution; it is paid in each case only what the courts will allow; it gives valuable advice to beneficiaries; it is always in a position to promptly make sound investments; it conscientiously carries out the wishes of the testators; it is never "too busy" to attend to the duties of its trusts; it has specialists for every duty; it treats all matters in its care as sacred and confidential; it protects beneficiaries from begging friends and relatives; it has no friends to reward and no enemies to punish; it makes prompt and complete reports to the county courts; it serves its own interests best when it serves its clients; it is hardly obliged to say "I didn't think;" it has distinguished, reputable, well-known counsel, officers and directors—and behind all that it does is always the potential factor of the great capital, surplus and undivided profits.

...rwood's Stand Against ... Successors of Really Great Americans

...arketing of our products will be at the mercy of any nation which has possessed ...ively of the means of carrying them, AND OUR POLITICS MAY BE IN... BY THOSE WHO COMMAND OUR COMMERCE."—From a statement ...AS JEFFERSON, when Secretary of State under President Washington in 1791.

...nderwood, in scorning to help repeal the 5 per cent. tariff discrimination in favor of ...ng, has expressed the true and stalwart American spirit. He bluntly refuses to be ... bullied by those who, having command of our commerce afloat, would now, as Thomas ...ied, seek to "influence" our politics.

...e odium for any such supine effort at repeal squarely upon President Wilson and ...e chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives takes ... under the flag of the American merchant marine, undismayed by the protests and ...gn interests and foreign governments, which consider American enterprise and Amer... merely as providing a golden field for their own exploitation.

... great Presidents of America have stood on this vital issue has been pointed out by Mr. ... the floor of Congress. Discriminating duties in favor of the American ship were advo... and enacted into law by the founders of the Democratic party.

...dison, the father of the Constitution of the United States, employed the logic and force ...tellect in favor of a discriminating clause in the very first bill enacted by the Congress ...ROUGH THE SUCCESSIVE PRESIDENCIES OF WASHINGTON, ADAMS, JEFFERSON, ...D MUNROE this thoroughly American policy was sustained. By 1826 American com... ...ried almost entirely in American ships.

... bill was passed suspending—not repealing—the discriminating duties. Its passage led ... sweeping of the American flag off the sea!

... the record of our great, early patriotic American Presidents. And now an American ... President seeks to repeal the one good thing in a tariff bill which has sent Europe into ... hysterical joy!

President Wilson has not an embarrassment on his hands, but a TREMENDOUS OPPORTUNITY. He can abrogate the musty treaties, made in the days of the ancient wind-jammers, that stand in the way. Meanwhile they are not violated by the terms of the new law. He can start this new policy in operation. If he is a great American Democrat, he will. If not, and it seems not, Congress can hold up Mr. Underwood's hands and prevent the raising of the British Union Jack, or the French Tricolor, or the German Double Eagle, or the Rising Sun of Japan, or the Flag of Brazil, or of Portugal, over the White House and over the Capitol.

Mr. Underwood stands like a lion for the government of America by Americans imbued with the real American spirit. He must be supported by his fellow-Americans in Congress, and by all of his countrymen whose manhood loathes the word "surrender."

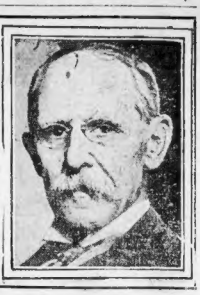
BIRDS AND AEROPLANES



Inventors Are Making a Special Study of All Species of Bird Flight in Hope of Solving the Secret of Flying; If Successful, Aeroplane Flying Will Be Revolutionized and Made Practically Safe.

By GARRETT P. SERVISS.

AN English philosopher once wrote a book on the human hand, showing its inimitable adaptations to its purpose, and its almost infinite capabilities as an instrument, or tool.

There is no doubt that many of the most ingenious and effective mechanical inventions that have ever been made are based upon, and were probably suggested by, the wonderful capacities of the human hand and fingers. Inventors have been able to follow these hints from the structure of the hand because, by daily use, all the various functions of its different parts are perfectly understood.

The wing of a bird is as marvelous an instrument as the hand of a man, and if its action could be as easily comprehended it would show us very quickly the best way to construct a flying machine. Unfortunately, since we were not born with wings, there are many things about them which are mysteries to us.

Inventors well understand this fact, and special studies of the wings of birds are being made for the purpose of getting more light upon their action, in order that the knowledge thus acquired may be applied to the improvement of aeroplanes.

Study Birds to Discover Secret of Their Flight

Messrs. Housay and Magnan of the Paris Sorbonne have, with this object in view, investigated the flight of 200 birds, belonging to seventy-five different species. They have discovered many very interesting facts, which may serve to guide the inventors of future aeroplanes.

One thing that they have found out, which greatly surprised them, is that the ratio of the motive power of birds to the supporting surface of the body and wings varies inversely instead of directly. This means that if the supporting surface is large the motive power is proportionately small, and if the supporting surface is small the motive power is proportionately large. Or, to put it in different words, the larger the wing surface the smaller the motive power, and vice versa.

This fact may prove of great use, for hitherto it has been assumed by the makers of aeroplanes that the best flying machine must be that having the most powerful motor and at the same time the greatest lifting power per unit of surface. Exactly the opposite relation is found among birds. The best flyers have, by far, the feeblest motive power and carry the smallest weight per unit of surface.

Direct comparison has shown that if an aeroplane of thirty feet spread, and carrying about four pounds per square foot, is reduced homologously, or part by part, to the dimensions of a bird of three feet spread, it can carry a weight of only about two-fifths of a pound per square foot of surface. Now, no bird is anything like so inefficient as that.

It becomes evident, then, that the wing of the bird depends for its power upon something else besides area. The elements that must be taken into account, and which we cannot yet imitate, or fully comprehend, are the quality of the feathers, the stiffness of the supporting ribs, their elasticity, and other unknown circumstances, which, it is suggested, may depend upon alimentation of the bird, that is, upon its mode of nourishment and digestion, which, in turn, affects its nervous and muscular systems.

Understanding Flight Would Solve Flying Machine Problem

Probably a complete comprehension of the mechanism of flight of a single bird, such as the gull, would place in our hands the means of making a flying machine incomparably superior to any yet produced. The full secret of the bird being discovered, we might be able to imitate it. But that secret remains hidden.

Not long ago I stood on the deck of a steamer in Plymouth Harbor, and, with a number of intelligent men, who were as interested as myself, watched the flight of hundreds of gulls, which came so close that the movements of their eyes were plainly visible. It was an exhibition of nature's magic as wonderful as could be imagined. The birds soared, turned, descended, rose, increased and decreased their speed, by slight tippings of their wings and changes of balance, only occasionally flapping their wings for a few seconds, and it actually seemed to the observer as if they did all this by mere exercise of the will, as we sometimes imagine ourselves flying in our dreams. One would have said that they possessed some source or kind of energy unknown to us. When the steamer moved off they followed and, without the least apparent exertion, and often without any visible movement of wing, kept abreast of it, outstripped it and sailed all around it. Without a single flap of its wings a gull would suddenly double its speed.

Invisible Air Currents Play Big Part in Flying

Nobody could see how it did it. Invisible air currents probably play a part in the phenomenon, but that is not all. The secret also lies partly in the structure and action of the feathers and in the control of the bird over the curvature of its wing surfaces.

Existing aeroplanes are a good beginning, but only a beginning, and before they can be perfected we must carry them through a course of evolution resembling that which the birds have undergone during the long ages that have elapsed since their reptilian ancestors first developed wings and learned to fly.

Mr. Brandeis Has Been Chosen as the Public's Champion in the Railroad Rate Controversy—The AMERICAN Congratulates the Public

It must be gratifying to the true friends of the best interests of New England to learn that the Interstate Commerce Commission has selected Mr. Louis D. Brandeis to represent the public in the hearing on the petition of the railroads to be permitted to increase their rates.

If the railroads are allowed to increase their rates, it means an increase in the cost of living, because nearly everything that we wear or eat or otherwise use is brought over the railroad and we pay the railroad charge when we buy the goods or the food.

If the people ever really wake up to the supreme importance of questions which affect the railroad service, they will find a means materially to reduce the cost of living.

Take the recent misbehavior of the New Haven Railroad, as an example. In the wild pursuit of an unlawful monopoly, this railroad ALONE has increased its indebtedness by a great many million dollars. Every dollar lost by the accumulation of that debt, the people of New England must pay. But this is not their ONLY loss. Mismanagement has followed inattention to legitimate railroad operation, because the Wall Street speculators who control the New Haven were not looking to honest railroad business for their profits, but rather to commissions and rake-offs on this increasing indebtedness and to the opportunities for extortion which a monopoly in the transportation field would give them by advancing rates WHEN THEY HAVE NO LONGER ANY RAILROAD COMPETITOR AND WHEN GOODS MUST BE SHIPPED OVER THEIR ROAD OR OVER NO ROAD AT ALL.

Neither does this complete the loss to the public. The Boston & Maine Railroad was a great New England institution just before the New Haven grabbed it, contrary to law. Its stock had sold for $190 a share. It had paid 8 per cent. dividends. It had paid good dividends for fifty years. Immediately after the New Haven got possession of it, its stock began to decline until now it is 62½, and its dividends began to decline until now they are entirely wiped out. Its organization became demoralized and business on its rails became almost stagnant.

The total loss to the business of New England in a territory served by this railroad will never be known. It means a great deal to any section of the country, competing in business with another section, to be handicapped by poor railroad service.

Now after the New Haven Railroad has had its debauch and after Morgan and the Wall Street speculators who controlled it have got their commission money in their pockets and after they have established their monopoly and after they have created a deficit in the New Haven treasury, they now turn to the public, asking for more money by an increase in rates.

This is exactly what Mr. Hearst and Mr. Brandeis both predicted more than a year ago would happen.

Thus, Mr. Brandeis survives all the miserable slanders which the secret and public agents of the railroad heaped upon him when he was warning the public against its aggrandizing career. He is selected by the government to be the public champion in this GREAT controversy. The AMERICAN congratulates the public.

The Splendid Mission of the Schoolhouse

In East Boston, Charlestown, Roxbury and South Boston are four splendid high school buildings.

Around these public schools revolves the social and educational life of the communities of which they are the centres.

They are now excellent examples of self-sustaining democracy.

Clubs for dressmaking, millinery, cooking, homemaking and music are well patronized by mothers and young women.

The gymnasiums draw men and boys in large numbers and membership in the school orchestras is considered an honor.

The large assembly halls with their stage equipment are constantly in demand for dramatic performances, lectures, moving pictures and for discussions on local needs as well as on general civic matters.

There are welfare leagues composed of citizens who are working for the interests of their districts.

The young people dance in fine sanitary surroundings and under wholesome supervision.

The work of these "Evening Centres," as they are called, is carried on by the directors of the evening schools, with a large corps of assistants, but the initiation and the execution of the programs are largely in the hands of the members.

Councils composed of representatives from each of the individual "Opportunity Clubs" pass upon important matters of management and provide entertainment, engage lecturers and censor moving pictures to be chosen on the lecture evenings.

These Evening Centres are paid for by a special tax of two cents on every $1,000 worth of taxable property.

All activities are free to members, who pay small dues to their individual club treasuries.

This movement to popularize the public schools, to make more use of them in providing social and educational opportunities for those whose regular school days are long past, has the entire approval of the Boston AMERICAN, which is watching the spread of such activities to other schools and to other towns with gratification.

To see the ideal of a wider use of schoolhouses fruiting steadily into such glorious realization is a pleasure of the highest kind.

Boston's enormous educational plant, excelled in value and perfection of equipment by few cities in America, and which has been used only to about a quarter of its capacity, is now beginning to realize its magnificent meaning and possibility to the people.

Boston is getting 30 per cent. more out of its public schools than she ever did in the past; more than doubling the educational value to the country.

It is using its costly and inspiring buildings to educate—one-half for the young, but the other half for the adult population.

The opening of two more schoolhouses this coming week, the Dorchester High School and the Washington Grammar, points to the rapidly spreading demand for more centres and more opportunities by the eager citizens.

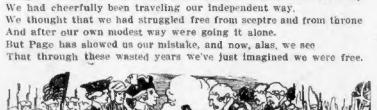
Boston is leading the way now to the system which will tend to wipe out jails and obliterate brothels and repudiate the grafter and the thug, and to establish the real commonwealth in which false ideals are banished and healthy pleasures established.

A SUBJECT NATION

By JAMES J. MONTAGUE

The United States is yet English led and English ruled.—Ambassador Page.

SOMEHOW we sort of fancied that the Boys from Valley Forge
In our history's early morning had walked out on old King George.
Long we've cherished the delusion that since old Ben Franklin's day
We had cheerfully been traveling our independent way.
We thought that we had struggled free from sceptre and from throne
And after our own modest way were going it alone.
But Page has showed us our mistake, and now, alas, we see
That through these wasted years we've just imagined we were free.



WHEN Mr. Washington stepped out and took Cornwallis' sword
Right after we had walloped the remaining British horde,
We thought he'd done a first-class job and that our infant nation
Had made good every promise in its glorious Declaration.
But Page, it seems, thinks otherwise. He makes it very plain
That all that bitter seven years of fighting was in vain.
Despite the Yorktown episode we still are held in thrall.
Our necks are bowed 'neath British heels, and we're not free at all.

WE liked to think that John Paul Jones, with sassiness and ease,
Had showed the Britons that we had the right to sail the seas.
We thought that when that second war was fought and won at last
That all the nations would admit our servitude was past.
Our statesmen all took off their coats and set to work to run
The land as they saw fit, nor asked advice from any one.
They did this to the present day, but now Page comes along
And in his frank and breezy way assures us they were wrong.

"WE'RE English led and English ruled," says Page; yet here and there
Are people who don't know it yet, so let us not despair.
Some ninety millions who believe in their deluded way
That they will be the bosses of their country, come what may.
But if some proof of their domain the British really need
We cheerfully will give 'em Page. He'll do to rule and lead!

THE GATE

By WILLIAM F. KIRK

"THIS is a picture of our gate," a sweet old mother said;
"They had it trimmed with roses on the day that we were wed.
Our children swung upon it once, and when the sun was low
Our Mary used to linger there and visit with her beau.
But always I remember most one bright September day
When my big boy walked through this gate, the time he went away.

"I had this picture taken when this home that we loved best
Was sold to city people just before we left the West.
I like to see its mossy posts and hear my big boy say,
'Don't cry, dear little mother; I am coming back some day.'
When I look hard at this old gate I always seem to see
His handsome, smiling features as he threw a kiss at me.

"He never comes to see us now, with all his wealth and fame;
He doesn't often write us, but we love him just the same.
It makes us proud and happy just to know that he is great,
To know he started winning from the day he left the gate.
But I would give the years to come, with all their joy and pain,
To see these mossy gate posts and to kiss my boy again."
